Gail McCoig Finds Rewards In Writing Poetry

October 7 this year is the 177th anniversary of one of the most decisive military encounters recorded in the pages of American history. On that autumn day in 1780, on a low ridge a few miles South of Gastonia was fought the Battle of Kings Mountain. This conflict is regarded by historians as the turning point in the Revolution, by which the 13 American colonies achieved complete independence.

At the Kings Mountain battle, about 900 Americans under command of Colonels John Sevier, Isaac Shelby, William Campbell and Otho Williams met some 1,100 British troops under Major Patrick Ferguson.

TODAY the Kings Mountain National Military Park has its many reminders of the brave frontiersmen whose victory at that place foreshadowed the British military defeats of 1781. The outcome of the battle had an important influence on hastening the end of the bitter struggle, climaxed with the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, Va., October 19, 1781.

The brave men who fought and died at Kings Mountain have ever since inspired the poet and the historian to tell of the heroism, the love of liberty and the devotion to American ideals of freedom.

One of these poets is the daughter of a Firestone employee.

Sixteen-year-old Gail McCoig has won national recognition for her poem "At The Crest Of A Hill".

Gail McCoig: Notes for another poem.

"Hill", based on the brilliant victory achieved at Kings Mountain. Ruby McCoig, third shift Winding, is the young poet's mother.

Gail, an eleventh-grade student at Ashley High School, is already widely acclaimed for some of the more than 20 poems she has authored.

"Many of my poems have been written purely for my own entertainment," she says.

BESIDES her keen interest in history and literature, the employee's daughter is a lover of music. Also, she likes to attend movies, and spends much time swimming, playing miniature golf and attending sports events, especially ball games.

In addition to these interests and her busy schedule at school, Gail is an active member of Loray Baptist Church. There, she participates in many activities of the youth program.

Gail's historical poem "At The Crest Of A Hill" was written while she was a student in Junior high school. The poem, reproduced here, won for her state and national honors in a contest sponsored by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

At The Crest Of A Hill

At the crest of a hill I was standing today—
"Now we're passing King's Mountain," I heard someone say.

Then I pictured the men with their loud battle cry,

As they fearlessly charged, though they knew they might die.

And that was the thought that made my blood chill,

There as I stood, at the crest of a hill.

At the crest of a hill I was fighting today—
I was fighting with men who heard Ferguson say,
"Britain's king claims this mountain. They won't turn the tide!"

Then Ferguson fell as God's name he defied.

My thoughts took on form, I captured a thrill,
There as I stood, at the crest of a hill.

At the crest of a hill I was standing today—
As I peered down on Ferguson's grave, ashy gray;
Then my eyes wandered up and I saw colors bright,
Saw the stars and the blue and the stripes, red and white.

This flag of our land, of peace and good will,
There as it waved, at the crest of a hill.

To the crest of a hill I was looking today—
To another hillcrest where in noble display
The capitol of a nation looks forward with pride,
Paid for by blood of men who here died.

Our freedom, their prize, will live on until
No longer men stand, at the crest of a hill.

Spooling

Those in Spooling have welcomed Gerald Beaver as a new employee in the department.

Lee Lattimore, spooler tender, was on sick leave in late September.
