Dr. Patsy O'Bang the world's greatest veterinarian answered the telephone and found himself talking to a farmer who wanted something for a sick calf that was off its feed. O'Bang who gives such services free, suggested that a pint of castor oil ought to do the job. It happened that the farmer's was a cat and not a calf. Later when Dr. O'Bang met the farmer, he asked about his sick calf, only to learn that it wasn't a calf at all. "Do you mean to say you gave a cat a pint of castor oil? What happened?" The farmer replied, "The last time I seen that cat, he was with five others runnin' over the hill. Two were diggin', two were coverin' up, and one was scoutin' for new territory.
