"A DAY OF FURY"

One violent day that mars the progress of a small frontier community to decency and respectability is depicted with stirring dramatic impact in "A Day of Fury," the Universal-International action drama in Technicolor which plays Tues. and Wed. July 3-4 at the Galax Theatre with Dale Robertson, Mara Corday and Jock Mahoney in the starring roles.

It's an offbeat tale, one in which the conflict that arises is the result of the fundamental natures of the persons involved rather than of a struggle for material things, like money, land or cattle. It has the overtones of psychological drama although it is basically a story of violent passions and action.

Much of the impact of the film can be attributed to a remarkable performance by Dale Robertson as a complex character who fits into no time-worn groove. On the face of things he's the villain of the piece, but he's not a badman in the accepted pattern of such characters. He does, however, represent a destructive force to the citizens of the town where the story takes place, because he stubbornly sets himself against the tide of advancing civilization that is bringing peace, order and security to the Old West.

Just as inevitably Jock Mahoney represents the new day that is coming, playing a peace officer who adheres not only to the code of honor that was the unwritten law of the frontier but also is determined to enforce the written codes of decency and order that have been brought in by the newer settlers.

Mara Corday's performance fully realizes the promise that was seen in her when she was given her first starring assignment only a year ago.
