"THE ROAD TO DENVER"

Brother is pitted against brother in Republic's "The road to Denver," an exciting, action-packed drama of the West in the mid-1800s. This new film, beautifully photographed in Trucolor, plays Sat. 30 at the Galax Theatre, starring John Payne, Mona Freeman, Lee J. Cobb, Ray Middleton and Skip Homeier.

John Payne and Skp Homeier portray the brothers who vie for the love of the same woman, enacted by Mona Freeman, and seek different roads to fame and fortune. Payne plays the older, resolute and dependable one, while Homeier is seen as a hot-headed, trigger-happy but basically loyal lad. How this conflict is brought to a happy but logical conclusion makes for exciting, dramatic and highly-pleasing screen entertainment.

To secure backgrounds which has just the right tone and flavor for the story's setting, associate producer-director Joe Kane took his company of thespians and technicians to the rugged virgin lands of Utah near the town of St. George. The troupe lived a "pioneer" existence for almost a fortnight while cinematographer Reggie Lanning captured the breath-taking beauty of the landscapes and the fast-paced action of the story's plot with his Trucolor cameras.
