Welcome Back --And Thank You (Con't)

When we consider that only a few years ago there was, in addition to these circumstances, the necessity for sending eight- or twenty miles for a doctor we cannot help but feel fortunate indeed that today we not only have our own doctors but our own hospital as well.

Primarily a hospital is an institution where surgical or medical treatment is administered and is followed by a supervised convalescence. Certainly it is gratifying to know that we have easy access to a place where every applicable means will be used in combating our specific ailment. But also there are a number of little special things like to remember about our own hospital such as these: The pervading friendly atmosphere contributed to by every member of the personnel; the whispered swish of a crisp white uniform and the cool gentle touch of the nurse who wears it; the thoughtful anticipation of your needs before you are compelled to state them; the soothing balm of a doctor's kind and reassuring words to a turbulent mind. These are not wonder drugs perhaps but their value is inestimable in a patient's return to normal health.

You summer residents have made all of this available to us, and in recognizing this fact it is not my intention to overlook what our own people have done. A large number of Highlands citizens have given unselfishly of their time, their money, their supreme endeavor in order to have a hospital; but all of us are soberly aware that without your generous help it would have been an impossible undertaking.
