QUIET VERSUS DISQUIET

What is there about a small town that draws its native sons and daughters back, no matter how far away they go? What is the compelling tie that binds the heart to its home town?

Those who are born and raised in large cities have ties with them and love their atmosphere, too, but it seems that they usually seek peace and solitude in the country every chance they get. There is something about the serenity of the country side that calms busy-rattled nerves and soothes fevered brows.

Small town living is, of course, slow and easy to the point of monotony—everyday is pretty much the same routine, —but consider these points of comparison between the quiet country life and the nerve-jangling pace of the city.

A 'vine-covered cottage' in a peaceful wooded area outside the quiet little town, with the family circle gathered around the home hearth and no outside disturbances—time to grow and develop together, to be together and strengthen the family relationships. — . The excitement and rush of the big town, families crowded together in apartment and tenement

FOUNDER'S GRANDSON VISITS

Mr. and Mrs. Seth L. Kelsey have recently been vacationing in Highlands. Mr. Kelsey is the grandson of Samuel T. Kelsey, the founder of Highlands.

Seth's father, the late Mr. Harlan P. Kelsey, was a prominent landscape architect and nurseryman, whose nurseries at East Boxford, Massachusetts, are nationally known. Seth is carrying on his father's work.

While here in Highlands, Mr. Kelsey visited the old Kelsey home, now known as Kanonah.
