I'D CLIMB THE HIGHEST MOUNTAIN

The faith of a circuit-riding minister is dramatically portrayed in "I'd Climb the Highest Mountain," which opens Tuesday, July 17, at the GALAX THEATRE.

Co-Starring Susan Hayward and William Lundigan, the film photographed in Technicolor, captures the rugged beauty of the North Georgia country, in which the story is laid.

Lundigan is the practical pastor of backwoods Georgia in the early nineteenth century, bringing an earthy but devout realism to his calling, and facing the consequences of any day with courage and resilience. Susan Hayward is the staunch wife, who shares the rigors of a life she has not previously known, to perfection. There has been no more accomplished or feeling portrayal of the pioneer woman on the American screen.

Directed by Henry King and produced by Lamar Trotti, the film boasts an outstanding supporting cast including Alexander Knox, Rory Calhoun, Barbara Bates, and Gene Lockheart.
