"ADVISE AND CONSENT"

The bitter personal feuds and political infighting that can reach into the highest places of Government, including the White House, are revealed with shocking candor and high drama in Otto Preminger's picture adaptation of Allen Drury's Pulitzer Prize best-seller, which will play at the GALAX THEATRE Sunday and Monday, August 19-20.

Equipped with a powerhouse cast including many of Hollywood's most distinguished names, "Advise and Consent" lifts the dome off the Capitol to bare the behind-scene operation of national politics.

"Advise and Consent" deals with the conflicts set in motion when the President's controversial choice for Secretary of State is sent to the U. S. Senate for confirmation.

Henry Fonda, whose nomination precipitates the battle, brings tremendous sincerity to his role of a man whose past threatens to engulf him. Charles Laughton, as the wily Southerner who leads the attack on Fonda, gives one of the finest performances of his career. Don Murray, chosen to head the Senate subcommittee that hears a testimony on the nomination, is fine as the politico whose past rises up to destroy him. Walter Pidgeon, as the majority leader who tries to guide the controversial nomination through the Senate, is excellent and Peter Lawford makes a debonair bachelor Senator. Lovely Gene Tierney emerges from retirement to portray a Washington hostess romantically attached to Pidgeon.

Other stars include Franchot Tone as the strong-willed, ailing President who tries to drive his nomination through stubborn opposition; Lew Ayres as the wavering Vice-President who meets the challenge of the Presidency with new-found confidence; Burgess Meredith, as a disturbed witness during the Senate hearing; Eddie Hodges as Fonda's teenage son; and Paul Ford, as the Senate whip. They all are excellent. George Grizzard contributes an acid portrayal of a young Senator with an overweening ambition, and Inga Swenson is Murray's harassed wife who is pitifully unable to cope with the threat facing her husband.
