("AUGUST IS THE YEAR," CONTINUED FROM 17)
black-eyed Susan before long.

It's the blossom of the squash vine and the vervain in full bloom.

It's the time of rich purple in the fields and meadows.

It's the wondrous blue of chickory and the purple of thistle and burdock and ironweed.

It's the sumac taking on a touch of scarlet and the sourwood beginning to catch fire.

It's the cidery smell of early apples on the ground and the first press of apple cider.

It's the stain of blackberry juice on the fingers and sliced peachers drying in the sun.

It's the flame of phlox in the door-yard and hollyhocks down by the roadside.

August in the hills is groundhogs and bears laying on the fat for hibernation.

It's the end of Dog Days when superstition says that dogs go mad, snakes go blind, and stagnant ponds are the source of poisonous vapors.

It's leather-britches and dried fruit hanging in strings from porch ceilings.

It's ripe oats and a farmer in the hay field bailing the second cutting.

It's a twist of birdsong and a flowering pumpkin vine.

It's hound dogs going on a diet of corn pone to slim and hone for a race with a bear among the high, wild laurel thickets.

It's a rick of hickory hearth-logs sun-drying for winter use.

It's corncob jelly and elderberry wine.

All this and more is August in the hills.
