"PLANET OF THE APES"

An ambitious excursion into the field of science fiction, "Planet of the Apes" has been given a production by Arthur P. Jacobs on a level with that of its aspirations. It is certainly the most expensive S-F film in years--and perhaps the most expensive released to date.

The subject matter, which comes from a novel by Pierre Boulle, is unique and intriguing: An unidentified planet is inhabited by a race of apes who lord it over the "human" population (animal-like mutes) and hunt them down as if they were beasts of prey. Into this strange land come four American astronauts whose spacecraft has crashed. Only one of them lives for very long, and the picture records the indignities to which he is cruelly subjected, his struggles to survive, and his eventual escape from his captors.

With Charlton Heston as the dauntless hero thrust into this peculiar situation, "Planet of the Apes" will obviously draw a much larger audience than that of the average S-F film. As pointed out before, this is a big picture--big in scope and intention as well as in production values.

Significantly "Planet" is one of those films which can be enjoyed on two levels -- as sheer adventure or as philosophical allegory.

The film plays at the GALAX THEATRE Thursday and Friday, August 28 and 29.
