NUMBER FIFTEEN

G. B. Shaw Play To Be Given At AC

The Stage and Script Club of Atlantic Christian will present on February 25 and 26 George Bernard Shaw's play "Androcles and the Lion." This play, about the Christian persecutions, tells the story of a meek Greek tailor who simply seems to like lions (not fish). In the play Androcles, played by Fred Barber, meets a certain lovable lion, Penny Kirk.

Other students in the play will be Maureen Ryan, who did such an excellent job in "She Stoops To Conquer," the Club's fall play, George Threewits, and Rae Torey.

In discussing the play's set, Cecil Willis, Stage and Script director, said the set will be one of the most elaborate attempted by the Club. Even though the play is fairly short, only about one hour in length, the action is quite fast and moving, going from a lonely forest glade to the mighty Roman Coliseum, complete with Emperor, played by Willis, Christians, lions, gladiators, beggars, lion keepers and about anyone else you would care to mention.

BE MY VALENTINE—Pretty Pam Larmer has found herself caught in a never-ending array of Valentines as she reminisces about the approach of February 14, St. Valentine's Day. Surely any ACC gentleman would be willing to be her Valentine.

Whence Cometh Valentine's Day?

By SAMMY JONES

The origin of Valentine's Day, celebrated each year on February 14, is not as simple as most of us seem to believe. Even the figure that inspired the name, St. Valentine himself, causes some questions. It seems that no less than three martyred Saints had the Name "Valentine." One was a Priest in Rome and another was the Bishop of Interamna, which is now Terni.

Whichever one is the correct founder, he was beheaded on February 14, 270. He would probably be surprised to learn today that he is revered by lovers all over the world. The church found that date most acceptable, since it fell near the celebration of the pagan holiday of Lupercilia.

On Luercillia the young man and women of the immediate area came together, the women's names were placed in some type of box, and each young man took one out. The one he choose was to be his mate for the following year. The church celebrated the same thing, with a few changes: instead of the box being filled with the names of available young women, it was filled with the names of Saints. The individual was supposed to mold his life after the life of the particular Saint he drew.

Chaucer tells us that on that day the birds are supposed to come together and choose their mates.

Co-Op Meet Approves Amendments

The Co-operative Association met on Tuesday, February 9th and approved two amendments to the proposed new constitution.

Article 11., Section 6, Part c of the proposed constitution before the passing of an amendment to this area read in part as follows: "In the event that a member other than a cabinet officer, shall forfeit his position on the Executive Board, his seat shall remain vacant." With the approval of the amendment the following has been added to this sentence: "until such time as new elections can be held by the organization."

Article V., Section 3 of the proposed constitution was deleted completely by a motion which was passed by the Co-operative Association and the following was added in its stead: "Any student who witnesses any academic dishonesty is to report in writing to the professor under whom the violation has been noted. The professor is then to advise the accused student of charges against him and the professor is then to report the violation to the Dean of Students or the proper college officials in a written statement within 24 hours. A professor who notes academic dishonesty shall also follow the above procedure."

That part of Article V., Section 3 which was deleted by the amendment is as follows: "Reporting: Violations of the Honor Policy shall be submitted to the Vice President of the Cooperative Association by Students in a signed, written statement within 48 hours after said offense has been noted. The faculty shall report, in the same manner, violations to the Dean of Students."

Final vote on the revision by the Cooperative Association will take place Tuesday and Wednesday, February 16-17. Vote will be by Australian Ballot. The Board of Trustees will either pass or reject the revision at its annual Winter meeting on February 24.
