

Harper Hall Destroyed By Panty Raid

SMASH HIT—The scene above shows Harper Hall as it appears after last Wednesday's forced entry by frenzied male students. Mr. Moorer, Maintenance Engineer, reported that $27.18 had been appropriated to get Harper back to its cozy old self again. He stated that with a little paint and plaster applied in the right places, the Great Hall will be ready in a couple of days to receive again its occupants who now complain of shower room problems at the frat houses where they now reside.

Harper Hall was the scene Wednesday night of a well-planned and rather uneventful panty raid. The net result appears to be several pairs of silk stockings and one pair of jockey shorts. It was rumored that the raid was carried out with the full cooperation of the Dean of Women and the residents of Harper Hall.

The usual Wednesday night calm had settled at Harper Hall after the Bohunk social ended at 7 p.m. Those males seen milling around Harper, according to Miss Jesse Daniel, the new Dean of Women, were in no more than their usual sedate spirit. "The trouble," states Miss Daniell, "was begun with the appearance of a fuzzy-headed man rumored to be one Bob Bennett." Miss Daniell went on to say that the man uttered a series of challenging remarks to the bench warmers across the way. The young maidens of Harper upon hearing these remarks took up the cry calling upon these men to enter their sacred halls and attempt to acquire pieces of clothing which are held in reserve for such occasions.

The men answered the challenge by fleeing to Hackney Hall for reinforcements. They returned only to find the Great Doors barred and barricaded to prevent entry. Fortunately the men had with them some overly large firecrackers which had been left over from their recent beer blast at Hackney. These were strategically placed in a few of the many weak points of the building and proved to be quite sufficient to allow entry as the accompanying photo will substantiate.

Economy Move Hits ACC

President Arthur Wenger announced today in order to help raise the necessary funds to build a faculty club room for the students that certain moves would be made to cut corners and provide students with a better education.

One of the first moves announced was the removing of all bricks from the walkway running through and using them for the faculty club. This will cost the school no additional expense as Mr. Carlin's physical fitness 10 class will accomplish the task as part of their fitness training. The fitness class hopes to tie the record of putting the bricks down — 2½ years.

Dr. Wenger then announced the next economy slash as removing the carpeting from Hines Hall. When questioned if this move would add to the noise factor Dr. Wenger stated, "We need to hear more from our students, and by taking up the carpeting we will know the students are moving around." Once the carpeting is removed it will be sold to raise additional revenue.

The campus support has been enthusiastic. The fraternity's, Delta Sig especially, has helped by saving metal that has amounted to one ton in old cans. The sororities not to be outdone, cast in 50 pounds of fraternity pins and lavalieres were of no value other than scrape. Both the Den of man and women commended these grops for the contributions they had made.

With these super human efforts from everyone involved
See ECONOMY Page 2

April Fool

Upon obtaining entry, the men were greeted with great cheers only to discover that these cheers came from men entering from another side of the building. The young maidens, it appears, had been evacuated by an underground railroad leading to various fraternity houses in the area. The girls will reside in these temporary shelters until the Hackney Hall men can repair the damage.

Dr. Arthur Winger said, "This event has added much color to the AC campus (blues, pinks, etc.) and I hope future events will receive this calibre of support from the student body."

Foot Ball Coming

Details were released today of Atlantic Christian College's return to an Inter-Collegiate football program.

At the same time it was announced that Ara Parsegian, formerly of Notre Dame, has agreed to take over as head coach and that ground-breaking for the new 100,000-seat stadium will take place next week.

The return to football had been expected after a large donation for athletics was received from the ACC Religion Department. Members of the Department stated that future religious crusades could bring larger financial grants to the football fund.

Parsegian, when contacted by this paper, noted that he felt he could have a great future with the school. He also stated that this year, due to a lack of funds (after paying his salary), there will be no scholarships offered. Next year, however, scholarship aid will be offered in a limited amount. Tentative plans, he said, call for offering 97 grants-in-aid next year with a ten per cent increase each year for 31 years.

As for the new stadium, it was learned that plans call for individual cushioned — rocking chairs and seats for everyone on the 50-yard line.

There will be a special helicopter shuttle-service from the college to the stadium which is to be built at the site of the present athletic field.

Commenting on the prospective season the Religion Dept. here stated that plans were underway for a ten game schedule to be played between Sept. 1 and Sept. 20. Consequently, the football season will be completed before basketball practice begins on Sept. 21.

Possible opponents mentioned are UCLA, King's Business College, Navy, Duke, Wilson Tech, and Coach Parsegian's old alumnus Notre Dame.

