Not Following Instructions

Breaking the law of teaching, by being disobedient and unfaithful, creates many very dangerous hazards. These difficulties always arise when the employee does not carry out instructions to the best of his ability, which causes serious accidents, lost time and in some cases even death.

Some months ago, an employee received a very small scratch on his hand. He did not report for First Aid immediately after the injury. Several days later infection set in. Then he reported to his foreman and the nurse, and was given proper instructions to carry out. He failed to carry out these instructions in the treatment of the injury, and as a result, had to be taken to the hospital. This resulted in several weeks of lost time from work, and a big hospital bill, all of which would have been unnecessary and could have been avoided had he followed instructions in the beginning.

Ignored Rules

Disobeyed orders and disregard for rules are due to "bull-headedness" and laziness, and usually result in serious injury or loss of life. Neglected rules do not convey friendliness between employer and employee, and they destroy morale. They tend to create disobedience that sometimes leads to disaster. Abide by the rules.
