

Masons At Work In Front Of Maintenance Building

Masons Do Many Jobs

The group of Masons shown above are making preparations to re-line a breaker-beater with concrete which is one of the many jobs these men do in helping to keep the wheels of production turning at Ecusta.

Masons, Painters, Millwrights, Oilers Important To Plant

This is the concluding article of the feature story about Ecusta's important Maintenance Department. In our former issues we have been dealing with the different departments or shops, their locations, and the respective part they play in the job of keeping the mill running. In this concluding part we will deal with several groups of skilled workers who are not confined to departments but who work all over the mill property wherever they may be needed.

Masons

We have one group of these skilled workers known as the Masons. It is the task of these masons to take care of all kinds of brick work whether it be repair work or remodeling, or altering of old work. Also any cement work that is done within the plant is handled by the masons. Jesse Gossett is their foreman and they are: Coy K. Brown, Cecil King, Joe Wright, Jim Bumgarner, W. A. Cline, Thomas Young and C. E. Cochrane.

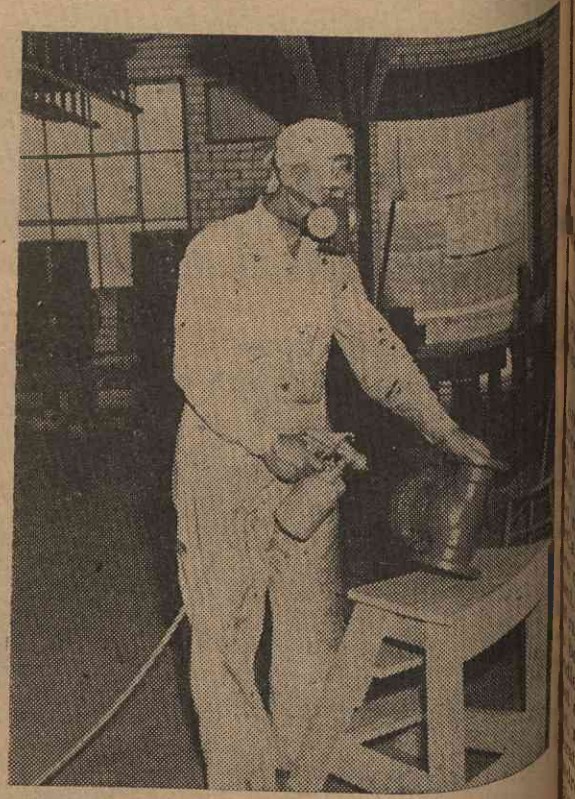

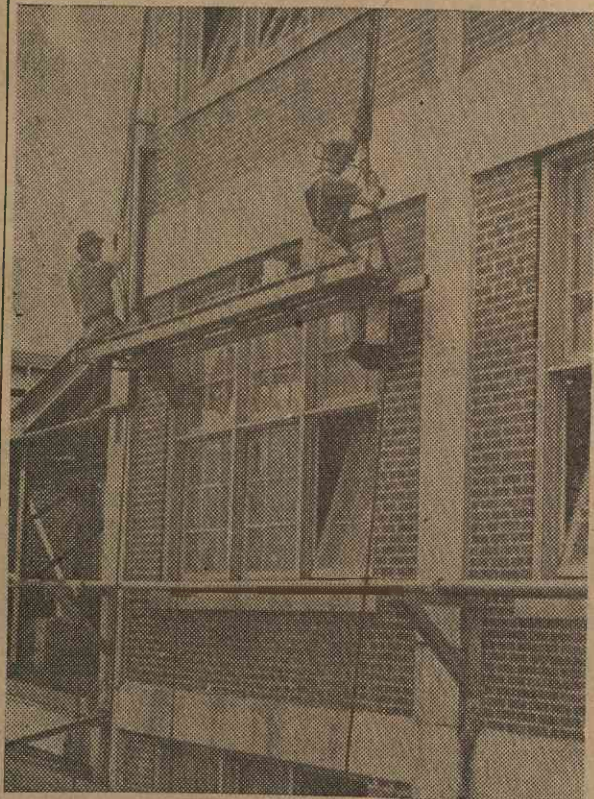

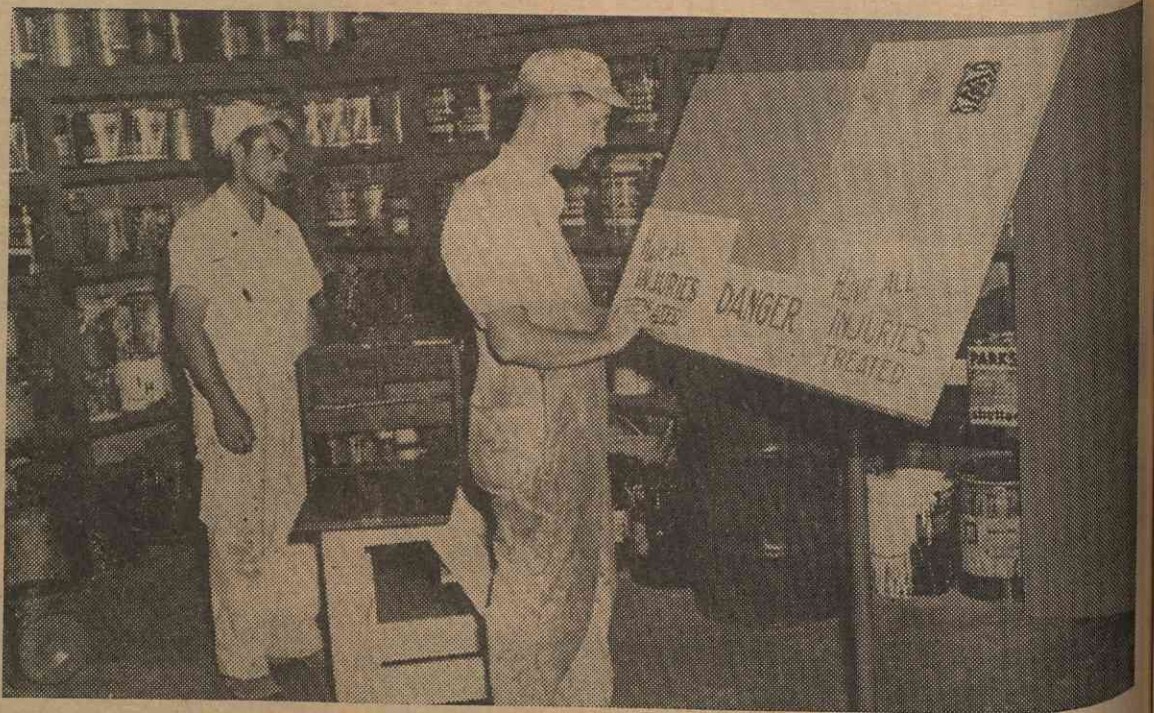

Painters

J. S. Whitaker is foreman of the painters. He has several painters in his crew and their job is to keep the mill painted. This means that all of the hundreds of doors and windows throughout the plant must be kept painted at all times so as to preserve them. All of the walls and ceilings must also be kept painted as well as the equipment contained therein. All new or repaired or salvaged equipment must be painted. The department also boasts of an excellent sign painter R. W. Pace who incidentally painted all of the signs for the Ecusta picnic.

The other painters besides Foreman Whitaker and R. W. Pace are as follows: T. B. Allison, L. A. Lemmons, C. S. Smith, Rufus C. Orr, R.

PAINTERS DO IMPORTANT WORK HERE AT ECUSTA

Shown in the picture at the top is R. W. Pace painting some of the signs that were used at the Ecusta picnic. J. S. Whitaker, foreman of the paint shop, is standing looking on. Lowering a "swinging stage" are Lester Lammons and Rufus Orr and in the other view is C. S. Smith spray-painting a check valve which has just been reconditioned.
