SPRING MATTRESSES are trickling on the market by the thousands. More will come along as manufacturers can get better quality tickings.

GOOD NEWS ITEM on the front is the abundance of both walnuts and pecans are in good supply. Almonds and filberts are plentiful. But don't forget Brazil nuts; the Amazon basin has its manpower shortages, ZIPPER TIGHT—After taking the better, zippers and fasteners are now scarcer. The armed services use huge amounts for uniforms and flying suits.

NO MORE GROPING—Electric switches and door knobs will be found in post-war rooms. Plastics containing fluorescent pigments will make them glow in the dark. Also ready to be used is a tiny shielded light which turns on automatically when the lights are turned out; it acts as a pilot light at night.

TRAVEL LIGHT—Expect no change of travel conditions. The tempo of the war in the East has put new demands on the equipment that makes it more imperative for you to watch your packing.

WAR TEXTILES—When fibers and synthetics are taken from their war duties you have access to so many new materials that it will be hard to choose among them. These are only a few: completely washable, water-proof house-dresses, wool that refuses to shrink, fabrics which can be dried and worn without ironing, table linens from aluminum.

ISN'T THIS A LOVELY HAIRDRESS?

THIS LOVELY HAIRDRESS is chic and correct for wear "on the job". After rolling both sides to the center of the neckline, pin it securely and hold it firmly, while you comb the ends and turn them under, page-boy fashion and pin them. If the ends seem too thin or too short, back comb them a little, brush them smooth over the top and hold them in a net.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT

The Rev. and Mrs. F. N. Orr, of Etowah, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Sue Orr, to 1st Sgt. Rual D. Brown of Hollywood, Fla. No date for the wedding has been announced.

Sgt. Brown is now serving with the armed forces overseas. Miss Orr is an employee of the Finishing department.

Trying to keep hair well-groomed on the job and glamorous after working hours is a problem which confronts most of us these days. There are not enough hairdressers to go around, what with war work winning so many of them, and even if we are lucky enough to find one whose free time fits in with ours, we still have the problem of what to do to keep hair looking its respectable best between appointments.

If you have tried to "fix" your hair but discovered that your results and your mental picture of what you were trying to accomplish are not exactly team mates, don't be discouraged; try again. Follow a few simple rules—do not expect a professional effect, but have confidence that your efforts will be lovely and attractive.

Start by having within reach everything you need for a shampoo and for curl rolling: your brush, comb, lintless towel, shampoo, hair cream or brilliantine (if your hair is particularly dry), plenty of hairpins, waveset (if you use it) and hairnet or bandeau.

Brush your hair by bending forward from the waist and taking long, firm brushstrokes which sweep the hair out at right angles to the head. Several times during the brushing, wipe your brush on a towel, in order to remove from it the soot and dirt it has just brushed from your hair.

Thoroughly wet your hair then add a bit of shampoo, if you use
