SO HE WEARS SAFETY SHOES

The hum of a thriving business came to an abrupt halt after G. W. Baron, who walked into a safety shoe store in Panama City, Fla., took a seat, pulled up his trouser leg and asked to have a pair of shoes fitted to his artificial limbs.

Things like this do not happen every day and clerks and management, not to mention customers, may be pardoned if they took time out to listen.

And there is a lesson to be learned. It is fairly simple; artificial feet such as Mr. Baron wore, cost $300 a pair. While there would be no physical pain there would be much financial anguish if a heavy piece of steel should crush one. Hence he protects them with safetoes.

Mr. Baron lost his feet when a boy. In spite of his handicap he has become a painter, motion picture operator, and truck driver.

Nor is he very hard to please. If the shoe pinches he takes a pen knife and whittles a little away from the toe, or he may add a little here and there to make it a snug job. But he can't whittle away too much because the mechanism must be protected.

The lesson to be learned is that if it is worthwhile to protect a pair of artificial feet, how could any intelligent man fail to protect good ones?

Meet In Philippines

HAROLD BROWN, left, and TED REESE, right, former Main Office employees, had a grand time when they met unexpectedly in the Philippines. Judging from the letter received from them they had a grand time talking over old times. Not only are they both from Ecusta, but worked here at the same job and both live in Hendersonville.

Brown And Reese Met In Philippines And Write Let

Harold H. Brown, PhM2-c, from the Philippine Islands, in the sense of the word, and from the standpoint of the information, methinks this will turn out to be unusual even at that, I think I write than a certain guy I know I go getting ahead of myself.

"Twas just before Christmas and as unexpected as could be, two former employees of Ecusta found out that they were on the same island. Not just former employees, either, but two who had worked together and at the same job. Yep, get set for a surprise. I got a letter from Ted Reese a few days ago and, to my surprise, I found that he was on the same island right here where I am. Only a matter of a few miles, that. I guess I shouldn't tell you on Ted (I think he has returned a bit since coming into the office) but he never was a good answer letters even though I kept on writing, so I didn't have any idea where he was until the letter arrived. All of a sudden I got a letter from someone who had my address and instead of coming to see me, he wrote me a letter. Even though the distance between our humble abodes is a matter of about 35 miles, it took the letter two days to get here. Just after I got the letter, I called him on the phone planning a reunion. Then two days later I had that reunion! It was a great one. That's the first reunion from Hendersonville I have had since I left, believe it or not. I had a few pictures made and am enclosing them.

"As you probably know, I haven't been out here very long. I'm a poor unfortunate guy — and I've been about all set to start the journey back, so the reunion came just in time for us to start getting acquainted again. I hope to see each other though we can't meet each other oftener because of Sunday watches that come so soon. I'll pass on my message of Ecusta to him, though, and we'll keep them burning in our hearts. I realize he was there after I left but I still have a lot of memories nevertheless. I hope to see Ecusta again—for the first time in two and a half years before he does again... that's what I have it on him!

"Christmas was quite a success here what with all the decorations, etc., provided by the Red Cross. We even had some fresh pine trees for Christmas trees direct from the States. The chow was something to brag about too. I'm key with all the trimmings, practically everything else I wanted. It was my third Christmas anniversary since I had the island and only leave. I'm hoping the one will be a white one; we have lots of hot sun here, and I hope that just doesn't go down for Christmas. The rain is a poor substitute for snow.

"Hope you had a swell Christmas and the New Year will be better. Keep holdin' the fort."

Employees and their families have not attended any of the Thursday night movies are expected to come out as some fine entertainment films are being shown each week.

You don't have to be afraid to take chances, but it helps.
