

Ecusta Is Host To A Number Of Visitors

REYNOLDS TOBACCO ENGINEERS MAKE TOUR OF PLANT

Director Of N. C. Recreation Commission Is Pleased With Program

Among the many visitors here at the plant during the past month was a group of engineers from R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company of Winston-Salem, Dr. Harold D. Meyer, executive director of North Carolina Recreation Commission from Raleigh, and Mr. Ralph K. Robinson, Imperial Potentate of Oasis Temple, Charlotte.

There were approximately 45 people in the group of engineers representing the Engineers' Club of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company. They arrived by bus, made a complete tour of the plant, and had lunch in the Cafeteria. Many fine compliments were extended by the members of this group and they stated that they had not realized the tremendous amount of preparation necessary for the manufacture of cigarette paper, nor did they have any idea that they would visit a plant as large as ours. They were particularly impressed with the appearance and cleanliness of the departments that they visited. Keen interest was shown on the part of the group in the manufacture of cigarette paper booklets and the belts that are used on the cigarette machines, when they visited Champagne Paper corporation and Endless Belt corporation.

Dr. Harold D. Meyer, executive director of North Carolina Recreation Commission, visited Ecusta June 10th. He made a complete tour of the plant. He was particularly interested in the Recreation Department and stated that in his opinion Ecusta had one of the finest Recreation departments he had ever seen.

Ralph K. Robinson, Imperial Potentate of Oasis Temple of the Shriners, was also a recent visitor of Ecusta. He was accompanied by Jerry Jerome, president of the Transylvania Shrine Club, S. Casper Chandler, recorder of Oasis Temple, and Mrs. Chandler. They also made a tour of the plant.

WHAT, INDEED?

The convivial fellow, walking on the waterfront, finds three policemen hard at work.

"Washya doin'?" he babbles.

"We're looking for a drowned man."

"Whashya want one for?"

Keeping awake in daytime picks more golden apples than lying awake at night.

happiness he offers proves to be most interesting, truly different and informative, read Singing Waters.

Jesse Stuart, author of Taps For Private Tussie, continues to stay in the limelight with his new and thoroughly satisfying Foretaste of Glory. Never before has the author perfected such a job of characterization. When an arc of colored lights shot across the northern sky, the aurora borealis, visible in the Kentucky hills, the people of the community thought the Judgment Day had come. Believing they would be snatched up to glory or dragged below, at any moment. The hill town was in a frenzy of fear, repentance and reconciliation, each, in his own way, preparing to meet his Maker. The unforgettable scenes, both tragic and hilarious are described as if the author stepped into their own lives. Only deep, intimate and understanding knowledge of the hill people enabled Jesse Stuart to write Foretaste of Glory.

Your library has added for your enjoyment, these books: The ABC of Aviation, Air Navigation, Splices and Rope Work, How to Make a Small Chemical Laboratory, A Start In Meteorology, and Book Binding Made Easy.

If you are planning your vacation and haven't decided just where, read: New York! New York! and Let's Visit Mexico.

We'd like to write in detail about all of these books, but space not permitting, we offer a list. Check those you want and then come by for them: Then and Now, Somerset Maughn; Tar on my Heels, Bill Sharpe; Rainbow at Dusk, Emilie Loring; Too Many Women, Maysie Greig; The Story of Dr. Wassell, James Hilton; Dina Cashman, Kathleen Norris; Mother, Kathleen Norris; The Pink Camelia, Temple Bailey; Duchess Hotspur, Rosamonde Marshal; Farmer Takes a Wife, John Gould; A House in the Uplands, Erskine Caldwell; Written on Darkness, Anne Somerhausen; Golden Earrings, Yolanda Foldes; A Frenchman Must Die, Kay Boyle; The Gallant Years, Anne Powers; Straw in the South Wind, Donald

Baby Corn: "Where did I come from, mother?"

Mother Corn: "Hush, darling, the stalk brought you."

ON THE BEAM

Two ants were running along at a great rate across the cracker box.

"Why are we going so fast?" asked one.

"Don't you see?" said the other. "It said, 'Tear along dotted line.'"
