The Asheville-Biltmore Bulldogs have just completed their most outstanding year on the gridiron. This has been a year of glory for the Bulldogs and for the College. We are happy that we have the opportunity to dedicate this issue of the Campus Crier as a tribute to the players. Bulldogs, we salute you.

Many students of A-B heard the Orchestra National of France in the Asheville auditorium Wednesday night through the courtesy of the Junior League, sponsor of the orchestra. Because the price of admission was prohibitive for many students, some would not have had the pleasure of attending had it not been for the public spirited leaders of the League. In behalf of those who attended, "We thank you, Junior League."

Over The Coffee Cup

By MAC

Have a cup of coffee, you-all, and let's chat awhile.

Well, folks, the football season is over and the basketball games are about to begin. Up until now, my favorite sport has been football. Beginning December 16, however, basketball will be tops on my list. I'm a fickle fan, I guess. I love one until another comes along . . . We're expecting great things from this season's basketeers, but I won't complain if they don't do any better than the Bulldog gridgers did this year.

Which reminds me, did you know that Mrs. Lowrance's first year typing class correctly predicted the outcome of nearly every game. For example, they told us that the Bulldogs would wallop Presbyterian with a total of 40 points (the actual score was 44-6 in our favor). They also said that the A-BC-Hiwassee game would come out 25-14, and who could forget the thrilling last quarter of that game, in which the battling Bulldogs came from behind to make the final tally 25-18?

OK, Mister Rudeen, I'll quit pestering you—if you'll buy a bigger coffee pot . . . Mr. Brock and his Concessionaires profitted the school over $500 this season. Not bad, not bad! . . . You know, I'm beginning to wonder whether the school mascot is Puck or Margie,—and that wasn't meant to be funny.

"Noche de paz, Noche de amor,"—those are the words which are being sung in room 5 these days as the Spanish classes get into the Christmas spirit—South American way.

The Weepers had a cryin' good time at their first meeting last week. Mr. Wooton supplied the place, John Wilson brought the roosters, Peggy cooked them, Anne and Louise made them into chicken salad, and the Weepers ate and ate. P. S.—Sam washed the dishes.

Mr. Wooton can hardly wait for the first snow-fall. He is in for a real thrill since he has seen snow only once—when he was five years old. We're betting that he will be only too glad when the last snow has melted and all the mud has disappeared come next April . . .

The lucky students who attended the splendid performance of the Orchestre National of France at the city auditorium on Thanksgiving eve were treated to a delightful evening, and the Asheville Junior League, sponsors, are to be heartily thanked for giving so many of our students complimentary tickets to this fonction.

Why must some people use the library of all places for a coat closet? This applies to members of the faculty as well as to students. Miss Williams has enough to contend with, without finding someone's overcoat lying on her

Letters To The Editor

Dear Sir:

An adequate, well-equipped library is necessary for first-class scholarship; there must be access to the proper material in order to carry out research work. The drive to obtain more books for the Biltmore College library recognizes this need, and the library has been considerably enlarged.

In this connection, it has occurred to me that there is a relatively inexpensive means by which those desiring to contribute books to the college might obtain more books, and not only obtain them more inexpensively, but secure books which would be very difficult to obtain otherwise, except at prohibitive cost.

Asheville is fortunate in having within her boundaries two old-book stores which contain many volumes which would be valuable additions to any library. One of these contains over ten thousand volumes of books of almost every subject; the other contains several thousand volumes of out of print books and first editions, all at very reasonable prices from 25 cents to $1.00 in most instances.

True, some of these books are fiction, but there is a great wealth of material on history, biography, psychology, philosophy, religion, travel, contemporary events, literary criticism and science. There are also complete sets of authors and bound files of old magazines of the 1800's. Some of these books are two hundred years old.

I suggest, therefore, that to all who are interested in contributing to the up-building of Biltmore College, the purchase of a few of these books and their contribution to the college library will not only be an inexpensive method of obtaining more books, but will preserve these valuable treasures of the past for the inspiration of future generations.

(Signed) Grant W. Owen.

Dear Sir:

I write this letter to express to you and other members of the staff my appreciation of the fine work you are doing this year with The Campus Crier. In reading the last issue of this college publication, I note that you invite suggestions.

It occurs to me that a column devoted to Alumni briefs would be welcomed by most of the readers of the paper. I suggest that you give this matter your considera-

MR. MOSER ENTERTAINS

Students and faculty of Asheville-Biltmore college were highly pleased with an assembly program conducted by their own Mr. Moser. Mr. Moser, who is very well known for his collection, and singing, of folk song, presented some of his best selections.

He has spent a lot of his time traveling through the mountains of North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia collecting these songs. Some of his collections are now in the Library of Congress.

Of all the selections he sang, the students seemed to like, "Good Old Mountain Dew" the best.

C. C. U. N. NEWS

The members of the College Chapter of the C. C. U. N. are continuing their weekly radio program, "Roundtable Discussion on Current Topics," each Wednesday night at seven-thirty (7:30 P.M.) over station WLOS.

On November 17, they had as their topic: "The Berlin Blockade." In this discussion, the students gave their interpretations of the contributing factors leading to the crisis in the Berlin area now.

On November 24, they had as their topic, "China and its War against Communism."

Any student wishing to take part on one of these programs is asked to contact Mr. Wells or any member of the C. C. U. N.

 new series . . . playing the bass fiddle between lines; Bill Norton is the M. C., and Jean Kennedy, Bob Pressley, Helen Dickerson, Bob Colkitt and Don Murray read a variety of lines from Professors to Hulla dancers.

Members of the Skylyner's orchestra are: Don Compton, Grady Nichols, Gus Coutlakis, Harold Jackson, Dave Walker, Talmadge Pierce, Grant Reed, and Mary Reed.

Future plans for the new program will enlarge the present cast to include other students who are not in the radio department. Anyone interested in this work is asked to contact Mr. Wooton.

I believe that Mr. McGuire can give information with reference to the names of colleges and Universities which the Alumni are now attending.

I shall be glad to lend to the reporter assigned to this feature of the paper my scrap book containing several articles of interest.
