BLUETS WINS MEDALIST HONORS IN COLUMBIA PRESS CONTEST

Bluets, the literary magazine of the college, has done it again. The high - ranking Asheville - Biltmore publication has been named winner of medalist honors in the Columbia Press Association contest for the third consecutive year.

A product of the college's creative writing department, the prose and poetry magazine gained national prominence during the Press Association's 1938 competition. The same year, Bluets was winner of first place honors in competition with junior colleges throughout the nation. Since 1938 the magazine has won either first place or medalist awards, highest honors obtainable in the junior college division.

The near phenomenal success of the magazine can be attributed in part to Mrs. Wishart and five students enrolled in creative writing classes here at the college. During the course of the term, short stories, book reviews, poems and miscellaneous writings are handed to the instructor, who in turn edits the material before publication. Any changes in the writings, however, are done by the students themselves. Members of this year's class are Mac Spears, Ruby Jean Herring, David Belcher, Betty Anne Fryar, and Quentin Enloe. In addition, material for the magazine has been submitted by Mary Higgins, Sylvania Lyda, Bobbie Capps, Virginia Speirakis, Carl Greene, Jr., Joan Dysland, Opal Tate, James Tabor, Arberta Floyd, Jean Harrison, George McCoy, and Bennie Reece. The magazine is issued semi-annually, in May and December.
