Psychology Club Works For Dept. Communication

Establishing two-way communication between faculty and students was the main topic of discussion in the Psychology Club meeting Tuesday, Feb. 8. Although the Psychology Club has been established for several months it has been dormant until now. During the course of the meeting the members discussed some organizational aspects, the philosophy and some long-range goals of the club.

The pervasive opinion was that, communication between faculty and students in the psychology department is, at best, inadequate. In order to remedy this situation the psychology students suggested that there be a committee to foster a two-way exchange and bridge the traditional academic gap.

Hopefully this communications committee, could function as a constructive mechanism to express student's grievances and channel input into the departmental decision-making process. Thereby the student could have a voice in such areas as curriculum change, text book selection, and course revision.

Before ending the meeting the group discussed ways to elicit broader-based participation among interested students.

Bulldogs Doing Well Despite Some Missing Faces

Several weeks ago the UNC-A basketball team suffered the loss of four varsity players due to academic ineligibilities. To fill the roster, Head Coach Bob Hartman had to come up with some new talent. His choices were to come from the freshmen team, and other varsity-men who had less playing experience. So far his new choices have proven themselves to be "goodrisks."

Hartman's 'Rookie Roundballers' have carried a large part of the load and in some instances even started. Outstanding efforts from Gray Gautier, Dave Dilling, and Mike Zimmer boosted the Bulldogs to victories over the University of Virgin Islands, the Carribean All-Stars, High Point, and Charleston Baptist, before losing a heart-breaker to Belmont Abbey in an overtime.

Gautier has led the move by the 'new' Bulldogs. In the four wins, Gray notched 51 points and really provided the help on the boards. In these same four games Dilling hit for 35 points and also hit the boards consistently. Mike Zimmer provided the needed bench strength which Coach Hartman always seems to use to his advantage.

Perhaps the unsung hero of the "Rookie Roundballers" is Gary St. Clair. Already a varsity player (before the academic suspensions), Gary had to begin to play much more, and even work as a starter in a few games. During the four game win streak he poured in 45 points, while he was the big man around both the offensive and defensive boards. St. Clair, nick-named "The Saint" by his teammates, played his best game at High Point, where he helped notch the initial win for UNC-A on the High Point floor, by leading all Bulldog scorers with 6 field goals and 5 of 7 from the free throw line for a total of 17 points.

But these men weren't the only ones involved in the victories. The remaining starters and varsity men had to pick up some of the slack left by the missing faces of Hartman's 'Faceless Five'. Jim Pheasant, Dean Naney, Durwood Dunlap, Kenin Cantwell, and Mike Grace provided experience and ability for the crippled Bulldogs. The scoring for these players during the afore mentioned four game stretch are as follows: Pheasant 40 pts., Nanney 27 pts. (played only in the last two games), Dunlap 45 pts., Cantwell 30 pts., and Grace 39 pts.

As easily noted, balanced scoring was a key factor in the success of the UNC-A forces. Perhaps with a little luck, a lot of hope, and more fastbreaking, pressing defense basketball, the playoffs, for a chance at a trip to Kansas City, aren't dead. All we can say is: May the best Bulldogs win!
