GAS SHORTAGE AFFECTS UNC-A

Because of the natural gas shortage, the Infirmary and T.C. & A. are being closed temporarily, and the dorms will not have hot water.

The Infirmary personnel are being re-located in the kitchen in Vance Hall in the Dormitory Village. The Office of Testing, Counseling, and Advising will be re-located on the ground floor of the Ramsey Library.

The dorms students will be seeing it rough, with the heat turned down, and having to take showers in the gymnasium.

All other buildings on campus are heated with oil, but Dean of Students Paul T. Deason states that we are also running out of oil, and lack sufficient funds to keep up the supply. Therefore, the temperature in all other buildings will be held at 65 degrees, until the weather changes or the supplies increase.

So if you're shivering in class, take it philosophically. And if you're lovelorn, there's comfort in remembering that such hardships have traditionally been considered the cure.

Sellers Drops Charges Against McCray in Campus Court

The Campus Court convened last week to hear the case of Sellers versus McCray, but decided to delay the hearing for one week to give the defense, Dr. Bruce Greenawalt, time to prepare his case. Ms. Rose Sellers, however, decided to drop charges after the meeting.

McCray was charged with verbal and physical assault. The alleged offense occurred November 2 at 7 P.M. in the snack bar. There were repeated delays in processing the case, because the Court was incomplete, the Christmas break interfered, and the problems with registration and the weather have prevented the members from having adequate time to review the material on the case.

Greenawalt, according to several present in the closed meeting, stated that the Court had not handled the case properly, since he had not received the necessary material in time to prepare a defense. Brynn Brown, Chairman of the Campus Court, stated later that Greenawalt's notification of his intentions to defend McCray did not include a request for material to be sent.

The case would have set a precedent, as being the only one heard by the Campus Court which involved a charge made by a student against another student. Dean Deason states that Ms. Sellers' decision to not press charges any further does not mean that the issue will be ignored. He does not know at present how it will be handled, but it is now his responsibility.
