

"I don't think you should mix politics and athletics. But, I think we haven't done enough about what has happened in Afghanistan. I think there should be more done, but not through athletics." --- Ricki Bell, UNC-A

"I think it's fine. I don't see what all the quarrel is if the Russians are going to invade other countries, I don't see why we should go over there and do this for them. It's really a benefit to their country and I don't see why we should spend money or give them any kind of benefit for invading Afghanistan. Fifty other countries agree with us. It's just Americans that think otherwise." --- Scott Keller, UNC-A

"They ought to stop making such a big deal out of the Olympics, anyway. They are just a bunch of athletes. If they want to run around a gymnasium, or something like that, they can go run around a gymnasium." Mike Whitt---

UNIVERSITATIS

The Rag and Bone Shop asked of the following people: "What do you think of mixing Politics and Olympics, vis-a-vis this country's boycott of the Moscow summer Olympics?"

"No, I don't think they should boycott the summer Olympics. The athletes who are planning to go would be penalized." --- Myra Sims, UNC-A

"I don't think it's really going to do any good, because I think the Russians are going to stay in Afghanistan, anyway. I think it's also a raw deal for the athletes --- training for four years, and all of a sudden, they get nothing. I don't think it's a good idea." --- Bob Korns, UNC-A

"It goes both ways. If Russia has invaded a country --- well Russia puts great emphasis on the Olympics and it would be quite a let-down if they did not get the Olympics. I think probably we should boycott them because the Russians are having the games and they are not in the spirit of the Olympic games. I don't believe I would go if I were in the games." --- Craig Harroff
