Governors See UNC-A Campus Growing

Five members of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors visited the campus Sept. 22 and were told the plans and shown the places where UNC-A will grow.

Chancellor Highsmith told the board members that UNC-A as they see it today has grown through the hard work and devotion of many people, especially since it became a branch of the Consolidated University in 1969.

"Our goal has been to develop the highest quality undergraduate program," Highsmith said, "and we believe we have done it."

The board members were in Asheville during a visit to the University's campuses in the western half of the state. Board Chairman William A. Johnson of Lillington was accompanied by former Governor James B. Holshouser Jr. of Southern Pines, Jack O'Kelley of Burlington, former state legislator J. Edwin Davenport of Nashville, N.C., and B. Irvin Boyle of Charlotte.

"The greatest handicap to UNC-A's physical development," Highsmith told the visitors, "has been the lack of residential housing on campus." Showing his guests the place where a new $4.8 million residence hall and adjoining student center will be started early next year, the chancellor said this first addition to UNC-A's housing in more than 10 years will provide accommodations for 300 students, more than doubling the number who can now live on campus. The residence hall and student center are expected to be open by the 1982 school year.

The board members were also shown the Charles B. Owen Art & Management Building to be opened later this fall and given a brief summary of the new services to business and industry that will be available through developments in the Management Department.

The group visited the Rhoades Science Building, heard a talk about UNC-A's Drama Department in the Carol Belk Theatre from department Chairman Arnold Wengrow and Theatre UNC-Asheville opens its 10th season with Moliere's classic comedy "The School for Wives," Thursday through Saturday, Oct. 11-13 at 8:30 p.m., with a Saturday matinee at 2:30 p.m. A special low price preview for the campus community is set for Wednesday, Oct. 10 at 8:30 p.m.

"The School for Wives" depicts the merry mix-ups that occur when an aging bachelor attempts to keep his young fiancée innocent of handsome young men but finds out to his sorrow that she has already made the discovery.

A free film on the life of Moliere will be shown on Tuesday, Oct. 9 at 4 p.m. in the Humanities Lecture Hall, and the French Club is sponsoring a reception prior to the opening night of "The School for Wives." Tickets for the reception and any of the performances can be purchased at the Carol Belk Theatre from 1-4 p.m. Because of the small seating capacity, advance purchase is recommended.

Energy, Women And The Future At UNC-A

Energy, women and the future, all fascinating subjects in their own right, will be discussed by two popular speakers in separate appearances at UNC-A this month.

On Friday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m., international energy expert Amory Lovins will speak in Lipinsky Auditorium on "the soft energy path" as the right way out of the world's energy problems. His lecture is titled, "An Energy Future We Can Live With."

The 30-year-old Lovins has served as an energy consultant in 15 countries and in the same capacity for several agencies of the United Nations. His article "Energy Strategy: The Road Not Taken?" in Foreign Affairs led to his being asked to appear as a principal witness at U.S. Senate hearings on long-range energy strategy. His most recent book is "Soft Energy Paths: Toward a Durable Peace." Among those who have heard Lovins
