

ALUMNUS GREEN TO PUBLISH

"The High Pitched Laugh of a Painted Lady," a collection of short stories by Lewis W. Green, is scheduled for spring publication by John F. Blair, Publisher.

A Haywood County mountaineer, veteran of the Korean War, former newspaper reporter and editor, Associated Press award winner and author of a highly-praised novel, Green studied creative writing at Asheville-Biltmore college (old UNC-A) in 1961. He edited the literary magazine, Bluets, that year, when it won All-Columbian honors in nationwide competition.

He returned to UNC-A in 1977-78, working in the Political Science Department and the library's archives. Before that time he taught journalism and creative writing at Warren Wilson College.

He finished his second novel, a story about the Korean War, in December. The first, "And Scatter the Proud," was called one of the best novels of the decade by the reviewer for The Seattle Times.

The book drew praise from Hemingway scholar Dr. Carlos Baker of Princeton and the late, famed editor of the Atlanta Constitution, Ralph McGill.

As a reporter for The Asheville Citizen, Green won several AP awards for feature writing. He also won awards from the N.C. Press Association for investigative reporting while he was editor-publisher (and writer) for The Native Stone, a weekly newspaper he started in 1971.

"The Year of the Swan," an Oriental fable Green wrote some years ago, was illustrated with woodcuts done by Gene bunker, former head of the UNC-A Art Department.

He has also written numerous magazine articles, short stories and poems.

The experiences he has distilled into his Korean War novel came with five battle stars collected as an Army infantryman in 1950 and '51. He later served in the U.S. Marines.

"The High Pitched Laugh of a Painted Lady" is drawn from Green's native North Carolina mountains.

He now lives and writes on a mountainside in the Fairview section.

TUNE IN, Y'ALL

If you'd like to know what various members of the faculty, student body and community can tell you about subjects related to their special interests, try tuning in radio station WISE, at 1310 kilocycles on the AM band, at 10 o'clock every Sunday evening.

UNC-A Report, with host Bill Mebane of the Public Information Office, offers a half-hour interview each week with the people who make UNC-A the stimulating place it is.

You may hear about the economy, outer space, psychology, poetry, study in Europe, music of one sort or another, or any of the number of things the world is full of.

At 10:30, sports fans and UNC-A Bulldog Boosters can get the latest word on basketball from Jerry Green on the Jerry Green Basketball Show. For the next half hour host Miles Morgan, Asheville Citizen Sports Editor, and coach Green bring fans up to date on any games they may have missed and give them a coach's-eye preview of contests to come.

It's UNC-A on the air, every week. Tune in and see what you may have been missing.

DOING OKAY

And just how well are UNC-A students doing now? Not bad at all, to judge by the figures. Among 38 graduated from the university in the middle of the 1979-80 school year, almost a third graduated with honors, according to a report by Registrar Jo Cadle. Of these 12, four graduated with Latin honors, for the highest academic achievement, and eight others "with distinction."

One hundred eighty-three students made the honors list for the first semester of the 79-80 academic year with a quality point average of 3.5 or better. Thirty-nine, or 21.3 per cent, made the highest possible average, a perfect 4.0.

YA GOTTA DECIDE!

Registrar Jo Cadle wants all students to have this reminder: Every student who has earned 60 semester hours of credit is required to register a major with the chairman of his major department.

"If you are a junior or senior and have not yet declared your major you should do so immediately," Mrs.

DORR: OUR GOAL IS SERVICE

could be?"

"We have an extremely talented faculty. But this is not enough in itself. Though the most significant service we render is teaching — helping others to learn — we must always see the role of the university and each member of the faculty in these terms: Whom can we help? What can we do for them? How can we do it best?"

"In a state university paid for by the taxpayers and dependent on the support of the local community, service reaches out beyond the student on the campus."

"The people of the Asheville area and Western North Carolina are looking to the university, and we must deliver. In addition to our regular courses, there are needs for conferences, short courses, speakers, consultants and knowledgeable people to serve on public and civic boards. These are the kinds of service our community has been asking for, and they are the sort that state universities are expected to provide."

"Can we do it? Many here are already doing it. I am convinced the University of North Carolina at Asheville is a tremendous resource for its community, but we must continually take stock of ourselves to see what more is possible."

"The goal is to help us all do better what we are here to do. We must respond fully and effectively to the real needs and expectations of our students and community. We must do so for our own self-esteem as much as for every other reason I have mentioned. Besides knowledge and wisdom, service to others is essential to the meaning of 'professional.'"
