

Poets' Corner

TWILIGHT

With scarcely a murmur the river
of day
Flows into the ocean of night;
The clouds in the west are vermilion and gray;
The tall, distant mountains are bright.

A timid breeze ripples the day's dying stream,
Makes waves on the ocean of
night;
And I, where I stroll in the dusk, hardly seem
To feel the full strength of the sight.

With music and laughter the days
move along
And scarcely a sound may we hear:—
Mechanical days—which we may not prolong,
Nor shorten, with smile or with tear.

The calendared days—how relentless they are!
How steadily, swiftly they flow!
Each with the brief life of a quick-falling star
That dies for a moment's bright glow!

We honor and fear what we may not control:
We look at the stars with amaze,
The sun, the soft moon, the slow
growth of the soul;
And at the swift passing of days.

So now I stand thoughtful and see,
while I may,
The mystery played for my
sight,
As wondrously-silent the river of day
Flows into the ocean of night.
—Robert R. Leeper.

SABBATH

A haze lingers on distant piney
groves,
A solitary cloud floats in the sky,
Like some lone traveler who onward roves,
It smiles a greeting, and then passes by.

A stilly hush, and then a bird's clear swell
Flows to mine ears like mellow-echoed lays
From long-hushed pipes. The Sabbath matin bell Reminds me that this is the Day of Days.

A honeysuckle on a fence away
Its aromatic balm pours on my breath.
The zephyr whispers of a cool
fresh day,
And incense wafts to sweeten the night's death.

I close mine eyes. A sense of peace divine
Sweeps o'er my soul and gives me inward Light.
I feel thy presence, God, I am all
Thine;
As perfect as this Day is, make me right!
—Hubert M. Turner.

MARS HILL GAME

long end of a 24-21 score.
Fox was the outstanding man on offense for Mars Hill with 8 points.

RAMBLERS LOSE TO MARS HILL 24-21

The Ramblers lost their second game in as many days when they were defeated by the Mars Hill Mountain Lions. The inability of the Ramblers to make crisp shots
cost them the game.
Leeper led the attack of the Mountain Lions while Mock looked best for the Ramblers.
