Forum

(By Susan Bundy)

Dear Editor:

We recently won our fourth game with Oak Ridge. To win over a team who had successfully played freshman teams of both Duke and Carolina seems little short of a miracle. Much praise should go to our baseball team.

After the Mars Hill game I expected to see the interest in baseball falling off, but I am glad to say that the interest is stronger than ever.

Girls are not supposed to have much knowledge of baseball; but having been brought up in a home where baseball is one of the main subject for talk, I have

Requiem

Let there be in your life great sorrow;
 Ever from grief will arise
 Infinite gladness. May you gain
 Glory; but if it fade by tomorrow,
 Hold one hope fast. In disguise
 Time dulls the thorn-sharp pain.
 Opaque forgetfulness take from your past
 Narrow delusions and dreams that can't last.

COMMENT

By Odell Salmon

Editor's Advice

A few days ago the city editor of the New York Journal was interviewed over the "Mr. Vice-President" program. In his comment he said that "a newspaper man must be worth two dollars for every one that he is paid."

As yet we do not know the strain of a job by which we must earn our daily bread; but we all know that wages and salaries are low. We know that regardless of what the salary may be, we must earn it, and usually twice the value of the check.

Money is the means to an end in any endless world. (Original)

Love Bug

There is a current popular hit about the love bug. But it's a good thing that the love bug doesn't leave holes when he bites. Some people would be riddled with holes.

Retold

PRISONER AND WARDEN

Back some years ago a warden was selecting a new "trustee," and he chose a prisoner whom the other men did not like and of whom they were jealous because of his decent conduct in the prison. As the warden was telling the other men of his choice, one prisoner became furious and attempted to stab the warden; but the trustee jumped in the way and was stabbed in the arm himself. His wound was soon healed, however.

The warden was transferred as lieutenant on the Miami police force, where he was serving at the time of the most disastrous hurricanes that Florida has ever witnessed.

One night during the hurricane all the officers were in the station house, for it was too stormy outside to attempt walking even a block. There was a knock outside, and a bleeding man was admitted. He was thought to be a good idea of the game.

I want the team to know that the girls are behind them.

Sincerely yours,
 Mary Emma McLean

bedying, and the commanding officer gave the victim a half hour to live. He was put in charge of the former warden; and as he was cleaning his face of blood, he recognized the man to be the prisoner who had saved his life. Immediately the new lieutenant asked for permission to take the man to a doctor; but the officer in command told him that should he leave he would be fired for insubordination on leaving the building. Yet he carried the dying man who had a crushed arm in the streets where it was thought to be impassible, for more than fifty yards. But they finally found a doctor, and the wounded man was saved.

Next morning the officer took his badge and gun to hand in, but the commanding officer had changed his mind. Today the former warden is in the service of the "G men."

TOLD BY RIPLEY

No man is more famous in America for his "supposed to be the truth stories" than Robert Ripley. Daily his stories appear in newspapers and each week he has a program on the air.

The following story is his:

In Africa there was a prominent dentist who did work on all types of men. One day a man who had features of an animal came into his office to have some filling put into his teeth. The work was done with gold.

Several days later the dentist was hunting in the jungle when he ran into the steps of a man. The steps were odd, yet they were something to trace, so he continued his search. Finally the steps changed to those of an ape or gorilla. The dentist hastened his travel, and suddenly he came upon a dead gorilla on the ground. Immediately he examined the animal; and when he opened the mouth, he saw the same gold which he had used for the filling at the dentist office that day.

Oh Yeah!

He: "What is school spirit?"
 She: "You know that stuff in the flat bottle."

Smart Co-ed

As a girl was filling out the dean's answer sheet in a certain college she ran into the same old question, "Why did you come to college?" She gave the answer that a lot of co-eds should have given when she wrote:

"I came to be went with, but I ain't yet."

Decline of Poetry

An editorial writer lists in his current publication the reasons he holds for the decline in the reading of poetry. Briefly they are:

1. Poetry is highly-specialized as is everything in America today.
2. Probably maladjustment between poetry and the times is a prime factor.

Appendicitis

According to statistics 18,000 persons in the United States will suffer from appendicitis during the next twelve months.

Business Man Exercises

A recent article in a current newsmagazine lists three reasons why business men middle-aged or past go to gymnasiums for exercise. Turkish baths, squash, etc. I quote verbatim.

1. They think they're getting fat.
2. They've been scared into reduction by their doctor.
3. They're romantically interested in some girl.

Women have a different way entirely of reducing, and we hear about it most at meal time. Possibly both ways are sufficient.

British Magazine

Those of you who read the magazines in our library very likely have noticed that there is a foreign periodical in the group. It is magazine published in England, and true to the old literary motherland it carries the name "The Spectator."

On Women

One of the most fascinatingly written articles that I have recently read is a treatise on American women. This article, "Our Feminized United States" by Struthers Burt in the May issue of Forum is pleasant reading that any student here would enjoy. Some one had read the magazine when I got to it; for there were pencil marks under lining certain sentences.
