wing splinter group spokesman who would discredit and undermine remarks of the representative delegation.

"In answering Jenkins, the leader of the Soviet delegation ignored the points raised by the British delegate and intimated that if Jenkins did not participate in the demonstrations which were designed to discredit his arguments, he might lose his health.

"Observing the violent, if not almost fanatic, opposition to Mr. Jenkins' remarks, the NSA delegation decided upon a more moderate approach in the hope that they might communicate their ideas to the minds of those who adhere rigidly to the Soviet line. This moderate approach caught the leadership of the IUS off guard.

"Then too, the Scotch delegation also chose to address the body in a moderate way—not seeking to provoke the assembly, but rather seeking to point out to them just exactly why the Western Representative of Students objected to the way IUS was being run.

"In the liberal tradition, the Western student unions had failed to unite prior to the congress and evolve a common plan of action for the congress itself. Each of the individual unions was attempting to reform the IUS without being accused of forming a block.

"Towards the middle of the Congress, however, it was realized by the various Western unions that they held common criticisms. At the instigation of the U. S. and the Scotch delegations, a common statement was prepared defining the Western unions' criticisms of the IUS.

"Even at this time, the British were reluctant to join in the presentation of a common statement.

"It is certainly apparent that if the Western student organizations are going to join for any purpose, they will have to search for a basis for unity."

Homcoming Foiled Last Year By Fire

By BARBARA HANSEN

Last year's homcoming went up in smoke along with part of Dunham Hall.

Gala plans were on the precipice of fulfillment, and all minds were channeled toward the full enjoyment of this annual event, when the sound of the siren and gray, swirling smoke that poured from the Administration building demanded full attention of students and faculty alike. You who were not here last year, imagine, if you can the emotions of people so suddenly deprived of the hoped for culmination of long, arduous hours of work.

Miss Lois Frazier with the help of students in her business classes, had spent her time, her energies and probably had hastened the graying of her hair trying to get the bulletins, along with a copy of the Clarion, mailed to all alumni and people connected with the college.

The bulletins had arrived late from the printer and in the frenzy of belated activity, many thumbs boasted paper cuts and many eyes winced at the sight of an envelope. All the manpower resources of the college—from President Ehlhardt himself down to the humblest freshman had been used to make the homcoming the success it always is. Then just a week before the guests of the college were to arrive, the leaf, ready to insure life to Homecoming, was burned at the petiole. In the midst of the ensuing confusion, letters of cancellation were written to people already invited and with the help of all the newspapers in the state most of the people were informed of the termination of all planned activities.

This year is different. At this writing, the picture has been completed and ready for exhibition on time—no flies have gotten in the oil paints. Little inconveniences like incomplete or out-of-date alumni files, insufficient envelopes ready for addressing and not enough working hours in a given day did not cause a stir. Even when the proofs of the bulletin were temporarily lost in the Clarion office, Miss Frazier just smiled, remembering that matters could be worse.

Miss Frazier employed the aid of Mrs. Kennedy, Dot Dellinger, Evelyn Poore, Betty Lineberry, Joyce Wilkinson and Betty Jean Evans in sending bulletins to 2,800 alumni and former students, plus

Think of her as a little girl that has grown an inch since you've last seen her. She wants you to remember her as she was, but she's anxious to see if you'll notice what's been added.
