FOOTBALLL RIVALRY ENDS IN CLOSE CONTEST

Holidays To Start  On Friday, Nov. 28

Petition Brings

Desired Results
Thanksgiving holidays were originally set for Thursday, November 27, only. It was felt that since many of the students had been taking advantage of the week-ends to go home, a prolonged Thanksgiving holiday would be unnecessary.

The student body, preferring to have their holiday on Saturday instead of Thursday, started a petition to apply to the administration for the entire week-end as a holiday. An overwhelming majority of the school signed it, and immediate action was taken by the faculty.
The faculty met November 5, and reversed their original decision due to the students' petition. Thanksgiving holidays will now begin at noon on Friday, November 28.

Miss Craig Has Book Dedicated To Her

"Do you remember?" That question was asked Miss Marjorie Craig recently about Burke Davis, a staff writer for the Greensboro Daily News. Miss Craig answered that she remembered quite well when she had Burke Davis in her creative writing class at Greensboro high school.

That was a number of years ago and Miss Craig has not seen Mr. Davis since that time.

What was the reason for that probing question? Burke Davis wrote Miss Craig this summer and told her that he was dedicating an historical novel, Yorktown, to her. This is Davis' third book, the first two being The Ragged Ones and Whisper My Name.

In Yorktown the author tells about the surrender of American forces to Cornwallis at Yorktown. The book is being published by Rinehart and Company, Inc., New York, and was released from the press on November 1.

The dedication page reads: "For Marjorie Craig-who first encouraged."

> Mrs. E. H. Ould Treats Students To Her Lively And Vigorous Views On Life

Mrs. E. H. Ould, prominent speaker and lecturer, appeared before the student body of Brevard college on the third, fourth, and fifth of November. Mrs. Ould, speaking with her usual amount of humor and good sense, was received with a tremendous amount of enthusia.sm by the students.

Mrs. Ould is a very familiar speaker throughout the state as well as in most other sections of the south. She has gained national acclaim as one of the best and most interesting lecturers on the problems of youth and is in constant demand. Many of the college students had heard her previously in the courses on "Courtship and Marriage," which she conducts annually in many of the church-affiliated training schools in this state. To those who had not previously heard her, it was a real treat and a renewed treat to the students who had already heard her.
President Stamey and Dean Stevenson both felt that the college was indeed fortunate in securing Mrs. Ould for this lecture series. Mr. Stamey said in his introduction that he felt that there was no one more capable of helping young people of college age to solve their problems than she. In Mrs. Ould, said Mr. Stamey, the students will find a person who can give them an answer to many of those everyday problems that continually come up in the average life.
Mrs. Ould, no doubt, attributes much of her understanding of these problems to being the mother of three children and of course continually having to cope with their problems. In addition to being a mother of three children, she is a grandmother of nine children. In the past she has been a school

HOMECOMING

Reunion with old classmates and friends was the keynote for the returning alumni during the Homecoming week end. Most of the returning alumni were from last year's graduating class. They began arriving late Friday afternoon and it was not until Sunday night that the familiar voices of alumni were completely gone from the campus.
For many, the high point of the week-end was the traditional Homecoming dance sponsored, as always, by the Euterpeans and Clios. The chapel was selected as the place where it would be held, marking the first time the auditorium had been used for such a purpose. People attending the dance were heard to remark that it was the most beautifully decorated dance they had been to yet on campus.
Tommy Langley's eight - piece band furnished the music for the dancing and part of the entertainment. From 10:00 to 10:30 there was a pause in the dancing and entertainment was provided for the guests. A trio, known as the "Bluzzettes," composed of Hilda Nor wood, Faye Smith and Shirley Johnson sang. Faye Smith also sang a solo, "Blue Moon." Rachel Meaders sang "Wish You Were Here," and "All The Things You Are." Alex Houston entertained with his ventriloquist act.

Nancy Carson, president of the Euterpeans, gave the welcoming speech and both she and Stowe Hull were recognized as the presidents of the societies sponsoring the dance.
This gala event was climaxed by the crowning of Nancy Setzer, sponsored by the Clios, and Arthur King, sponsored by the Christian

Delphians Win Title By Tight 6-0 Score

The Delphian society managed to sneak by the Cliosophic society six to nothing in the final game of the intramural football league.
The game showed the spirit of gaod fellowship that has been stressed throughout the season. In the last two games the score has been indicative of the close play of the two teams. The hard-charging defensive line of the Delphians has proven the deciding factor in the games so far this season. Jim Elliott and Chunk Chisholm, the two heavies of the Delphians, made the Clio's usual passing attack almost suicidal, but in doing so brought out a running attack which continually moved the Delphians back into the shadow of their own goal post. The winning offense was paced by Don Malcolm and Arthur King. A pass from Malcolm to Bill Eller scored the only touchdown and a pass for the extra point was missed.

Now that intramurals are over in football, Coach Fitzpatrick plans to start immediately into the basketball program. A list of the games will be made public as soon as the schedule is completed.

Clio Carnival Is Termed Big Success

The annual fall carnival was held on October 30 in the recreation room of Brevard college. This year, the carnival was held under the sponsorship of the Cliosophic society.
The carnival featured this year the House of Horrors, and the Fortune Teller. These two stayed packed throughout the night, and were enjoyed by everyone. Other attractions were the seven wonders of the world, fishing, cake walks and dancing. The cake walks in particular proved also to be a success with the students. Homemade cakes were the prizes for the cake walks (what the students who ate the cakes want to know, is who made them at home?)
All of the students who attended the carnival seemed to have gotten into the Halloween spirit a day early and enjoyed it thoroughly. President of the Cliosophics, Stowe Hull, was very pleased with the results.
In the opinion of all who attended the carnival, the outstanding personality was the fortune teller of the night, June Craft. June showed great originality in predicting the futures and outlining the past of all who came to her seeking a glimpse into their own deep dark secrets.
