What A Junior College

until the third or fourth years—students at Brevard College display dramatic talent in public performances, publish a newspaper, edit an annual, exhibit art, appear in instrumental and vocal recitals, plan and enjoy dances and various parties, and participate in every fine type of activity any college presents.

5. The junior college is not a college that is not yet grown up. It is a college developed uniquely in the twentieth century to meet needs that are contemporary and to meet them in a contemporary way.

We invite high school students to send for literature about the college. We invite alumni to renew their association with their alma mater and to increase their support of her. We invite church people to work with us now in developing a college which can be looked to in leadership in junior college education.
