MR. HARRISON TAWNEY

Harrison E. Tawney, who holds the B.S. in education from Ohio State University and the M.A. in education from Kent State University, will direct the program of guidance and counseling. Professor Tawney was employed as director of public relations at St. Mary's Seminary and Junior College in St. Mary's Virginia, as principal of Troy High School in Welshfield, Ohio, and director of guidance at George Mason High School in Falls Church, Virginia.

MRS. BARBARA DAYE

Instructor in health and physical education for women is Barbara W. Daye. Mrs. Daye is a B.S. and M.A. graduate of Appalachian State Teachers College. She has taught at West Henderson High School, Lee's McRae Appalachian Summer camp, and as a fellowship grant teacher at Appalachian's elementary school and college groups.

MISS MARIE BENGÉ

Marie Bengé, instructor in mathematics, is a graduate of Brevard College and Western Carolina College. While at Western Carolina she earned the B.S. and M.A. degrees with major emphasis in mathematics. She has also done graduate study at the University of South Carolina and received the National Science Foundation grant for mathematics teachers. Miss Bengé has had teaching experience at North Buncombe and Franklin High Schools, and has assisted with the Gifted Child Program at Western Carolina.

MR. RAY BURSON

Professor Ray H. Burson, a B.S. graduate of Rutgers University and an M.A. graduate of the University of Missouri, is in the English Department. His considerable experience in foreign teaching includes: serving as a language teacher for the Turkish Air Force Language School in Izmir and as instructor and director of courses for Centro-Colombo-Americano in Cali, Colombia, South America.

To Be A Freshman

It's been said that the completion of high school and the subsequent entrance into college are the turning points in one's life. This, perhaps, is true if a certain freshman finds that his compass bearings are several or many degrees deviated from his proper direction, and realizing this, decides to make that particular part of his life a changing point. Then, on the other hand, as is the case with most modern college freshmen, the commencement of their first college year evidences a desire for a continuation of train of knowledge which probably began in early high or late junior high school. This does not necessarily denote a turning point but more likely and more desirably a chance to straighten a few curves, remove some personal obstacle, answer one or two questions that almost certainly would have remained unanswered were it not for ambition.

An often overlooked, yet still present, facet of freshman life on any college campus is the manner in which friends are made. More than at any previous time, one needs sincere companionship since in time of need of consolation, an acquaintance will not properly suffice as a crying shoulder. Whereas, in the past, friends were made by convenience of communication, as a result of a bitter fight, or maybe by playing a sport together. Now, common interests, desire for understanding, or help are not uncommon reasons for development of friendships that are more likely destined for long futures.

With a desire for supplementary knowledge, with a courage not to surrender to any problem, no matter how towering, with a confidence that we will reach our various marks and a faith that if we don't, it still was a real nice clambake; and we all had a real good time. We will live our lives with our dreams in the clouds and our feet on the ground.

This is the plight of the freshman.

Organ Recital

cert Series on October 15, Mr. Adams stated that a limited number of tickets for this year's series are still available and are on sale. The first concert in Asheville features a ballet troupe, the Raduga Dancers.

Formal Convocation

The formal convocation of Brevard College's faculty was held in the Campus Center Building on September 16.

Faculty members were introduced by Dean J. Braxton Harris, and the speaker was introduced by Mr. W. Glenn Hardesty.

Addressing the student body was Reverend James B. McLarty, brother of Dr. E. K. McLarty, and secretary of the Board of Trustees of Brevard College.

Workshop Speaker

Reverend Brunson Wallace addressed the college faculty and student workshop members on Saturday morning, September 12.

The pastor of Brevard Methodist Church presented an inspirational message concerning "Our Sense of Values," in which he stated that "A positive affirmation of our beliefs precedes defensive apologies."

Life Among The Natives Or: Cuts And Jibes

By TREVA MITCHELL

FLASH: Will the one responsible for the rain dances please cease and desist? Your enthusiasm is wonderful, but this is ridiculous!

FLASH: There is a plan underfoot to try to obtain a couple of rowboats to run between the dorms and the gym. Your wholehearted support of this plan is urged. We understand, also, that Mr. Miles and Mr. Fisher are selling shares in an ark.

Another session of Brevard Tech is in full swing. Things have fallen back into pattern for the sophomores: Dunham Hall crumbles on, Mr. Fisher and Mr. Miles are still cutting each other, Dean Roberts is still cutting both of them, and it still rains every day!

Some things have changed, though. Miss Allen is gone, (we haven't had a campus epidemic yet!), and we have a new Dean of Women.

The campus itself has changed, with the new administration building and surrounding roads taking shape. Of course, by the time the roof is put on, the walls will have disintegrated with age. That is quite beside the point, however.

The freshmen are learning fast. They no longer ask sophomores for advice. Instead, they tell US what to do. ("Get lost, man, she's MY date tonight.")

In a few more weeks, national elections will be held. Someone will have to be around to console Dave Drum, Rory McManus, and Miss Jarrell, (I hope). If it isn't necessary to console them, then John Shreeves and yours truly will be able to use a little help.

So much for now—we'll see you around next issue with more cuts and jibes.

It's Smart to Be Thrifty

Hey, Freshmen!

You say you

Left chemistry lab feeling smug because you had gotten through early, then two hours later, you realized that you missed an experiment? And you spent ten minutes trying to get your post office box open before you found that it wasn't even your box? And you spent three hours working on an English theme and your roommate dumped a cup of coffee all over it?

You say you

Opened the door to your room and nearly drowned because some wise guy had propped a waste can full of water above the door? And you stood in line for forty-five minutes and just as soon as you started eating lunch, the bell rang for your next class? And you got a telephone call from "John," made a date for Saturday night, and at eight o'clock found out that he wasn't the "John" you were expecting?

You say you

Burst out laughing in class and got embarrassed when no one else laughed? And you slipped and fell in the mud and ruined twenty-five dollars' worth of books? And you woke up, went to class, and found that you'd over-slept and missed two classes?

So what, Freshmen? Don't worry about it! Hold up your head and smile, because you have plenty of company.

A Student's Lament To A Faculty Member

I wish I was a widdle egg away up in a twee.

I wish I was a widdle egg as wotten as could be,

So when Dean Woberts hollers weal woud at me,

I'd smash me wotten widdle self and spwatter me on he.
