

Crabtree Sends Ambassador

You probably met him at the first of the year, when he walked up, stuck out his hand (hand-shaking is one of his main pastimes) and said, "Howdy, I'm Jim Reeves and I'm glad to welcome you to Brevard." He's that type—a friendly sort.

He's the Campus Rectory from Crabtree-Iron Duff, North Carolina. Crabtree (and Jim's from Upper Crabtree, by the way) is a small rural community where everybody's friendly and knows everybody else—Jim likes it that way. In fact, he likes it so much that he goes home every opportunity he gets. He is also very proud of the fact that he was one of a graduating high school class of sixteen.

A staunch conservative, he once launched himself on a rampant "Anti-Rebel" campaign, in which he ardently defended anything that everyone else was against. After a time, however, he abandoned this and went back to his old hobby: arguing (about anything) with Mr. Wilson and Don Vaughn. Jim loves to argue; in fact, he loves to talk period. Especially to the ladies.

Talking, nevertheless, is second in line to his other great love. Food. His friends at Webb Hill report that it isn't safe to leave food lying around, nor is it exactly safe in your hand.

Well-remembered is the day in the cafeteria when some of the boys bet him he couldn't eat ten bowls of hanana pudding. They paid for them, and he ate them. Speaking of food, he also occasionally delights in "saucering" his coffee and eating cornbread and milk, to the supreme horror of any Yankees who happen to be sitting with him. Nobody, however, cooks like his grandmother, Jim asserts.

The major event of Jim's day is his afternoon nap, but the major passion of his life is television. He's an addict, watches it constantly. His favorite "programs" are the commercials, which he is devoted to, especially the Alka-Seltzer ad.

Student of The Week—Jim Reeves

He gets entirely extangled in science fiction movies. If anyone touches him, he hits the ceiling; so he has to sit in the corner so no one can get at him. Then too, he's a real fan of children's movies such as "Bambi" and "Cinderella".

Television has been known to get Jim into trouble. Like there was the time he turned on the water in the bathtub and then became involved in watching TV. He only remembered the tub when the water began coming through the Webb Hill living room ceiling, right in the middle of "F Troop."

Speaking of Webb Hill, the other boys report that they're thankful that Jim dropped his music lessons after first semester (that singing in the bathroom was getting out of hand.) They also say that he's a lousy shot in a water balloon fight, but that he's a marvelous target. He won't turn and run; he'll stand there and get clobbered. Note: sometimes Jim has the feeling that the boys at Webb are ganging up on him. They are.

In what time he can spare from television, eating and sleeping, Jim's Chaplain Roy's student helper, a member of Alpha Beta Gamma, Business Manager of the Clarion, President of MSF, a member of Christian Council, the Choir, and Kappa Chi. He also save Kennedy half-dollars and is firmly convinced they're going to be worth a fortune in the near future.

He craves comic books, particularly "Magnus, the Robot Fighter".

Jim and Joe Bob Nesbitt, his roommate and old friend from Crabtree, separate all of their possessions, except when Jim makes the supreme mistake of borrowing Joe's socks or ties. And then there's war.

After Brevard, Jim plans to go

Lecturers Speak To Sociology 28

Two guest lecturers recently addressed the students in Sociology 28.

The first of the lectures took place on April 18 and concerned economics. "Marriage is nice," Mr. Ray Fisher informed the sociology students, "—but you can't afford it." He then proceeded to prove his point by citing facts and figures from Coleman Andrews, of the Department of Internal Revenue. Among the points discussed were whether to buy or rent a house, how much insurance, and working wives.

The second of the lectures, on April 22, was by the Reverend G. Daniel McCall of the Brevard-Davidson River Presbyterian Church; Mr. McCall answered students' questions concerning religion. Some of the areas touched upon were the function of the Bible in governing modern morality, sex relations for a nengaged couple, and Protestant Catholic marriages.

Campus Ladies Meet, Elect

Mrs. Ruth Martin, president, and Mrs. Marie Craig, secretary-treasurer, were elected by the Campus Ladies on April 26, to head their organization for next year.

The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Florence Railsback, and Dr. Railsback, physics professor, entertained the ladies with his color slides of flowers. According to several of the members the slides were "beautiful."

to Scarritt College. He wants to major in religion and minor in agriculture, because he truly loves the farm and would rather be there than anywhere else on earth.

He's "Jim Bob Reeves—from Haywood County and proud of it". And what else about him? He goes out of his way to think about others especially those in trouble. He's teeth-grittingly broadminded, will listen to almost anyone, violently disagree, and then say, "But that's your point of view and you may be right."

He's a good human being, a tru eindividual, and he's not afraid to be himself in a world of people afraid to be different. He's a fighter and a friend. We love you, Jim. Don't change.
