SGA Begins Spring Campaign

Every spring at Brevard there is a transition in our Student Government Association. And like every other year, for some reason or another, student interest is never there. More than likely, the majority of this student body is interested in the daily life of this school, but it takes leaders to display this feeling.

Many times this year I've caught myself saying, "If we just had some bargaining power." But that's an "if" and not the actual situation. When I assumed the vice-presidency, I had visions of moving mountains, but not by myself, not with ten people, but with everyone helping. When the student body acknowledges the Student Government Association as a reputable tool in college politics and supports it enthusiastically, then and only then will it become a truly effective and efficient organization.

Brevard College is making that gradual transition, sometimes so gradual that you don't always notice the change. Believe me, if you put yourself into student government you can effect as well as perfect the changes. So when we begin our massive spring election campaigns, climb on the bandwagon and put the student back in your student government association.

Miss Nicholson Gives Talk

Miss Bobbie Nicholson, of the Chemistry department here at Brevard College - addressed the AAUW meeting on the subject of Conservation. She chose as her topic "Conservation of Our Natural Resources, who Cares?"

Throughout the course of the talk Miss Nicholson rated the natural resources found in North Carolina, using the following ratings of very bad, bad, poor, fair, good, very good, and excellent.

According to 1969 statistics, Miss Nicholson pointed out that the air and water here in North Carolina are rated as very bad and bad. This condition is caused by the various types of pollutants as well as the so called man-made pollutants which include exhaust from cars and industrial waste.

The remaining categories of soil, forests, wildlife and minerals were rated as either fair or good.

A considerable portion of the speech was devoted to the preventative measures that must be taken. It is each individual's responsibility to keep informed on the problem and support the legislation pertaining to these problems of ecology.

Listed below are some measures that each student of Brevard College can take:

1. Use soap, not detergent
2. Conserve water
3. Pesticides (check with county agent).
4. Don't use aerosol cans
5. Use and buy returnable bottles
6. Cutdown use of paper products
7. Conserve electricity
8. Use lead free gasoline
9. Keep car tuned up
10. Don't use plastics
11. Always have a litter bag handy

History Of Brevard College Revealed, Photograph Gallery

By Mike Jones

The gallery of 15 photographs that now arrays the first floor of the classroom building is a result of a $350 gift which was left by the class of 1965. The photographs are to remain permanently in the classroom building in memory of Robert L. Abernathy of Rutherford College, James A. Regan of Weaver College, and Fitch Taylor of Brevard Institute, all of whom played major roles in the merging of the three institutes in 1930 to form Brevard College.

Mr. David Holcombe had the original idea for this project, and he, along with Mr. James Jackson, Mr. Eugene Lovely, and Mr. Louis Miles, took on the task of selecting 15 out of approximately 100 photographs to be sent to New York for enlargement. The photographs, some of which are around 100 years old, were obtained from the college archives in the library and depict scenes that were once typical at Brevard College and at the historical colleges that formed it.

According to Mr. Miles, this display shows Brevard's heritage of quality education and impresses that Brevard College, through its ancestors, has been around for a long time.

Winter Convocation Officially Opens Spring Semester

By Mark Todd

The Spring semester was officially begun last week with the opening Winter Convocation. Prior to the Convocation address by President Robert A. Davis, a brief memorial observance was held in memory of student Bruce Smith. Smith was killed in an automobile accident Dec. 18, or shortly after the beginning of the Christmas Holidays. SGA President, Lyndon Ashworth, and Paul Sims, President of Christian Council, presided over the observance.

President Davis' address, entitled "Our College and Our Future," dealt with new possibilities for higher education in the future as presented in the recent Carnegie Report. Some of the possibilities Dr. Davis mentioned were a shortening of the four-year degree program, having the first year of college work taken the last year of high school, and simply offering four basic degrees rather than the great number that now exist. This final revision would result in the offering of the Associate in Arts Degree (A.A.), Bachelor of Arts (B.A.), Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.), and Doctor of Arts (D.A.).

Dr. Davis also noted the fact that a school like Brevard, which now offers freshmen and sophomore level work, would under the new system, offer instead the second and third year of college. And the third year could conceivably be the final one, pertaining to B. A. requirements. All of the possible revisions are seen as moves to cut rapidly increasing costs while gaining efficiency.

President Davis also expressed optimism in the possibility of the 1971 North Carolina Legislature's passing a new plan under which the state would conceivably offer tuition scholarships for students attending private and church supported schools. The new plan, already in existence in New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, would definitely be a boost to these institutions if passed, according to Dr. Davis.

Mrs. Grace Munro Ends Her Visitation Program

Mrs. Grace Munro, who was on sabbatical during the fall semester from the business department of the college, is glad to be back on campus.

After talking with more than a hundred business and professional men and women about their secretarial needs and hearing over and over again of the scarcity of good secretaries, Mrs. Munro was eager to get back to her chosen career of training secretaries. Having been a secretary herself, she realizes the importance of the position and takes pride in turning out well-qualified secretaries.

In commenting on her visitation program, which she refers to as a "good-will tour," Mrs. Munro said that attitude is being stressed far more than skills. She added, however, that this is only natural; for the applicant must pass a skills test before being hired in the first place.

"Office dress may have been revolutionized by the acceptance of the pant suit," said Mrs. Munro, "but nothing will ever replace the old-fashioned virtues of responsibility, dependability, initiative, integrity, etc. They are here to stay, and any girl who earns the coveted title of secretary must have them."

In addition to visiting industry, Mrs. Munro also visited high schools and colleges. When talking with high school students, she emphasized the importance of learning to live as well as learning to make a living; and she compared the Brevard College campus to a laboratory, where students could learn both.

Several senior colleges evaluated the business curriculum of Brevard College, and it was the consensus of opinion that Brevard has a good, strong program, one that would well prepare its students for a senior college or the business world, depending on the pattern of study.
