

ETSU prints are on display in Coltrane

An exhibit of art work by graduate and undergraduate students of East Tennessee State University at Johnson City is now on exhibit at the Coltrane Art Building. The prints will be shown until March 9.

All works are prints and the exhibit as a whole shows a variety of print-making techniques including silk screen, etching, dry point, photographic silk screen, lithography and woodcut. In addition to making an interesting exhibit, the prints make a very good teaching aid for the art department.

One interesting example is the print in the center of the east wall titled "Horison." This work was done with a plastic engraving plate and dental tool.

"Breakfast of Champions" (Wheaties!) demonstrates a straight silk screen, as does the work "Left Handed Game for Right Handed Players," one of two in the exhibit by Brevard art instructor, Robert Poe.

Another interesting work is the "Oatmeal" woodcut on the west wall. In the exhibit are several embossed works such as "Adam and Evelyn" or "Anything Goes."

Several more intriguing works top this exhibit in a fine way. For an interesting and educational feast, see these prints.

Brevard receives harpsicord

Brevard College is getting a new addition to its Music Department. It is a harpsicord being built by Joan Moser, professor on leave, and Pat Austin, a Brevard Graduate. The harpsicord being built is made from a Zukerman Harpsicord Kit. It cost approximately $444.00. However, when it is put together and completely finished it will sell for $2100.00. It is made from Walnut and has been put together entirely by hand.

A harpsicord is a keyboard instrument, popular during the 16th and late 17th century. Similar to the piano, it has a keyboard of five octaves. The shape of the instrument is similar to a grand piano but the sound is entirely different.

The instrument should be completed by the end of this month and the sound of harpsicord music will ring out soft and sweet.

KEN DEBLIEU

Student designs, launches various model missiles

On Tuesday, the eighth of February, an expensive model rocket crashed high atop Boshamer Gymnasium. Its operator, Ken DeBlieu, called it "an error in trajectory."

DeBlieu is a model rocket expert; but he, unlike many other young people, does not merely play with rocketry. Ken is conducting a private scientific reasearch project. He has designed and built his own electrically ignited model rocket. He has been experimenting with rockets off and on since he was 12 years old. Only after these many years of experimentation is he qualified to take on the complicated task of designing and building his own rocket.

His rockets are not simple. He is presently building a rocket capable of carrying in its nose cone such equipment as sensors for measuring air temperature, acceleration rate of spin, and even a microphone and movie camera. The microphone will be used to send the data as measured by the sensors back to the ground where it will be received by a walkie-talkie type receiver.

The rockets themselves are made of balsa and paper tubing. They are powered by pre-packaged dry fuel rocket engines that vary in thrust power. Ken's present rocket is only a single stage rocket but he has flown two stage rockets and plans to fly rockets with two or more stages in the near future. Ken's present rocket is only about 2½ feet tall, but model rockets in general range in height from several inches to 4½ feet. Ken's rocket has a top speed of about 350 miles per hour and top altitude of 1,500 plus feet. The rocket itself is gently floated back to earth by a brightly colored parachute.

The cost for such a project is not high as might be expected. Rockets can be built for as little as three dollars, and as much as several hundred dollars. The rockets can be built from separate componets or can be bought as kits. They are sold at most hobby shops and even places such as Western Auto in Brevard.

Ken says that model rocketry as a sport or hobby is on the rise. The complicated and exciting nature of these rockets makes them appealing to many people of all ages. Rocketry meets are springing up all over the country and are thriving on competition between individual builders.

Ken says that the popularity of model rocketry is rapidly rising; but, nevertheless he has found it difficult to start a local model rocketry club at Brevard.

Ken DeBlieu's purpose is not merely to have a "good time." He is deeply involved in his private research. He wants to find out as much as possible in the area of aerodynamics with his own equipment. This endeavor is by no means petty and is as respectable as it is complicated and exciting.

BC loans its gym

Brevard College has consented to the use of its gymnasium by organized basketball teams within the area. The program has proved to be a tremendous success. Exciting action is exhibited by these teams every Saturday, with the first game being slated at 9:00 a. m.

Brevard College Cagers have been serving as referees, and they have stated that the games are well disciplined.

The lending of the gymnasium provides a good opportunity for organized team sports

Rev. Thomas Stockton to lead Encounter Week

Encounter Week is to be held here on campus March 6-9. Rev. Thomas Stockton of Central Methodist Church in Asheville is being featured. He is to give lectures Monday evening and Tuesday and Wednesday mornings. The topic is to be concerned with the future.

Rev. Stockton also plans to meet with students from 12:30 to 1:30 p. m. on Tuesday and Wednesday in the cafeteria. This will give them more opportunity to discuss and have their questions answered.

Tuesday evening at 7:30 p. m. Danny Taylor, a proefssional entertainer, will give a program upstairs in the Student Union. And Wednesday evening at 7:00 p. m. Expression '72, a coffee house, will be held in the ping pong room at the Student Union. Following that The Lord's Supper will be offered for interested students in the lobby of the McLarty Goodson Building at 9:30 p. m.

NOTICE

Brevard's Basketball team and coaching staff would like to extend its appreciation to those fans who attended the Spartanburg game for their tremendous effort in backing Brevard to its 84-82 overtime victory Saturday night.

Letters To Early communion begins Sunday

along with some rights that have been forgotten. An American citizen at the age 18 has freedom of speech, press, etc. He also has the honorable privilege of registering himself for the draft lottery. If by chance one is chosen for military service he has the chance to kill and be killed. Everyday people are murdered in the streets and homes of our cities. Sheltering people from reality is not going to solve the problem. When one who has been seltered all his life meets a real situation and his escape mechanisms fail, he is doomed. In so illustrating my intentions are thus — not showing certain movies on this campus will not help or solve anything 'cause brother it's still there and always will be so let's face it.

John Hedden

Dear Editor:

Let me first of all express to The Clarion my appreciation for the creation of an open forum on the nature of a Christian college. Most of the unrest on the campus of Brevard College results from our common failure — that of faculty staff, and administration, as well as students — to understand or to articulate our understanding of this important concept.

I would not claim to be able to understand the idea fully or to articulate it with perfect clarity. I would like simply to grope a bit towards a better awareness of just what it is that we are doing here together.

A Christian college is an academic community, a coming together of persons, in time and in space, to share together the pursuit of truth. Students must be prepared to teach, and teachers to learn. All should be united in a common conviction that God is love, and that men must love one another — and the green earth that supports them — or die.

Such a relationship demands reciprocity. In a Christian college, persons must talk to one another, and they must listen. They must be prepared to compromise; they must be willing to admit that they have hold of only a fragment of the seamless garment of truth.

If Brevard College is a Christian college, it is because we recognize the communal quality of our enterprise. If it is not a Christian college, it is because we have failed to do so.

Beginning next Sunday and continuing each Sunday through the season of Lent until Palm Sunday, March 26, there will be an early Communion Service at the First United Methodist Church. This service will be held on a come-and-go-at-will basis from 9:10 to 9:30 AM in the Chapel of the Church.

Worshippers may come for the entire period which will begin with Communion prayers or come anytime during the period. Officiating will be the Rev. Orion N. Hutchinson, Jr., Special Lecturer in Religion at the college, and organ music will be provided by the Rev. Nelson F. Adams, Chairman of the college's Fine Arts Division.

Students are invited and urged to take advantage of this Sunday Communion experience. The Chapel is on the left side of the church building located across the street from the front of the campus.

SUL votes on test fees

The Student Union Legislature met on Wednesday, February 9, to discuss cafeteria hours, the bus fund, parking tickets, and test fees.

The cafeteria is being kept open until 8:45 Monday through Friday on a trial basis. Students are reminded that to keep this priviledge, they must help keep the cafeteria clean.

To raise money for the bus fund, Brevard may sponsor the Eastern Collegiate Coast Frog-Jumping Contest. By sending ads to other schools, Brevard could raise money for the bus fund. A committee has been organized to look into this.

Jake will be giving parking tickets for parking behind Jones and for parking illegally beside Jones.

The S.U.L. voted on a proposal that the $5.00 fee for taking tests earlier or later than scheduled should be abolished. It passed, and will be brought up at a meeting of the Administration.
