

Brevard's Modern Day Pioneer

If you ever get a chance take a walk over to the Art Building and there you will meet Tim Murray who will shatter your stereotyped image of a college professor. You will see that contrary to popular belief, professors do not have a red pen growing out of their hands and books glued to their noses. Believe it or not some of them are actually creative, as you will see if you spend a few minutes with Tim Murray.

Murray, a native of Britian, came to the United States in 1947 and is by no means an ordinary man as many of his students and fellow professors will tell you.

He worked his way through college by working at everything from dish washer to a camp director in camps.

He is a "sports freak" and loves to participate in every kind of sport. He even gets out and runs two miles every night; while most of the students are running a pool stick between their fingers.

This month he will chair and moderate a panel on "The Teaching of Art in the Junior College" in Nashville, Tennessee.

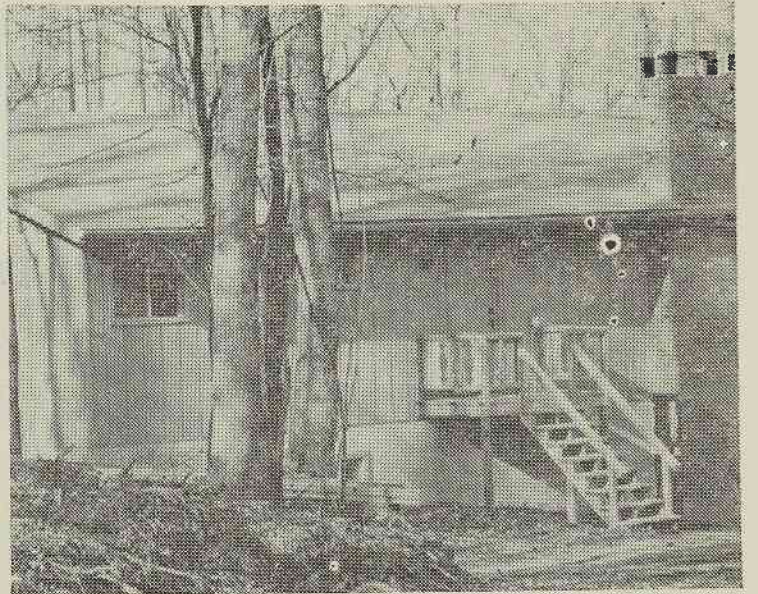

Murray believes in the philosophy that there is not anything a man can not do if he puts his mind to it. He not only believes it but he puts it to practice, which is clearly shown not only through his personality and work; but also through his home.

After living ten years on campus, he decided to build his own home on the Cantrell Mountain Range. He basically planned it from an American Timber Home; but changed what he did not like about it so that every space was useable. This is not the unusual part about the home, for many people do plan their own homes. However, they usually do not work as a carpenter for a month to learn the trade so they can help build their house, as Murray did.

Of course Murray being the kind of man he is wants to share his new knowledge. He took some of his students to Kentucky to gather up two thousand bricks to build a kiln with. Next semester Murray will be teaching his students the art of construction.

Now for a warning to upcoming Art students: Mr. Murray says that next summer he might try his hand at being an electrician. But if you love Tim Murray, as most of his students do this year, you will be willing to do anything he asks.

Students Search For Missing Boy

Suspense and worry entered the lives of a few individuals of Brevard College on the cold evening of Thursday, November 29.

An eight-year-old boy left Brevard Elementary School the afternoon of the 29th, yet he had not returned home that evening at 7:00 p. m. His worried parents placed a call to the Police Department, concerning his missing status. They, in turn, introduced the matter to the Transylvania Rescue Squad, which quickly dispersed all units.

It was this action which involved several individuals at Brevard College. The area from the stoplights in the center of town to the old high school was searched by teams of two and four, until 4:00 a. m. Butch Hunter and Jerry Stores searched the entire area on a motorcycle, which was incidently given to the searchers by the owner of the Triamble Restaurant. Alex Hinson, Bob Hupp

Bob Greer, Steve Kerr and practically the entire first floor of East Beam Dormitory searched the area on foot.

The young boy, who was not found after an hour search, strolled into his home Friday morning barefooted and with a bad case of frostbite. Although the search failed, the alient efforts displayed by the combined force of local authorities and Brevard College students will not be forgotten by the parents of the child or any of the individuals involved

Those Were The Good Old Days?

Although students may complain among themselves about the seemingly oppressive policies of Brevard College great strides in the liberalization of policies concerning behavior have been made since 1966.

In 1966 1st semester freshmen were not allowed to have cars on campus and also freshmen women were required to be in the dorm by 7:30 p. m. on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday except to go to the library. In the 66-67 handbook it is made quite clear that the library privilege was not to be used for dating.

A policy that existed in 66 that would threaten the very survival of students today was that of "closed weekends" for the first four weeks of each semester. The weekends of homecoming, spring festival and before and during exams were also closed.

The closing hours for women's dormitories in 1966 were as follows:

- Mon. - Thurs. -- 10:00 p. m.
- Friday ----- 10:30 p. m.
- Saturday ----- 12:00 a. m.
- Sunday ----- 11:45 p. m.

Men were required to sign-out on weekends or if leaving town and the women had to sign-out if they left the dorm for any reason after 7:30 p. m.

Brevard co-eds caught smoking outdoors were subject to serious penalty. The College even dictated the dress of women students; "... Students should avoid the business districts and must not enter any business establishment while in slacks or bermudas. . . . Students must wear dresses or skirts when attending classes and taking examinations."

Gym suits, bermuda shorts, jeans, halters, etc., could not be worn until 1:00 p. m.

By 1969 a great deal of changes had taken place; closing hours were extended "closed weekends" no longer existed, the sign-out procedure was liberalized, a dress code was no longer spelled out, freshmen were allowed to have cars and with the exception of minor revisions in the closing hours things became in 1969 what they are now in 1973.

A great deal of change has taken place in the last seven years and all of it for the better; so do not despair frustrated students things are "on the go" here at Brevard College!
