

Men Must Surrender ID's in Jones Dorm

By Cindy Cox

Brevard College male students who wish to visit a resident in Jones Dorm during weekends are now required to give their ID's to an attendant in the lobby, Dean Scarborough recently announced.

Men who are not BC students are asked to leave a driver's license and furnish the name and room number of the resident they wish to visit.

Resident Tutors Charlotte Breed and Sherry Bowers say they are pleased with the outcome of this new rule and wish to continue it throughout this semester.

The tutors both agreed that the male participants of this three-week-old security procedure have been "especially kind and cooperative." So far no one has refused to surrender his identification; therefore, state the tutors, no one has yet been turned away.

When the program was first put into effect, problems were expected. But the attitude and cooperation of the student body has been quite positive, according to the tutors.

Charlotte and Sherry say that the program not only secures the building, but also aids in the prevention of vandalism, noise, and point-giving.

After talking with representatives from other colleges and universities, Sherry and Charlotte found Jones' new security procedures to be the most lenient in comparison with other schools. Some schools employ a 24-hour security guard in the dorm lobby.

Because of the apparent success of these new procedures, campus officials are currently considering implementing them in Beam Dorm.

Sherry Bowers stated, "It's not intended to cause people problems."

Allegedly, some Jobs Corpsmen and/or other town residents became unwelcomed guests in Jones during a recent weekend. According to a resident of Jones, four to six such visitors were escorted off campus by college guards.

Campus officials implemented these new procedures in order to prevent unauthorized people from visiting Jones during the weekend.

Recitals to be Staged

By Phil Monte

Throughout the months of March, April, and May the Music Department will be staging its spring recitals.

Staged in Dunham Auditorium, the recitals will give the music majors a chance to display their talent to the faculty, students, and the public.

There are two main types of recitals. The first is for music-performance majors. These entail a full recital required by the music faculty so that performance proficiency may be demonstrated.

Most students involved in such recitals desire a career in music.

The second type of recital is called the concentration level recital. This recital is an honor bestowed upon music majors who desire a career in music other than performance.

Students performing in this mode of recital must have a hearing set two weeks prior to the recital date to meet minimum standards of proficiency, thereby gaining eligibility for the performance.

This year's performance majors include Susan Eastwood, Michelle Ebner, and Susan Traynor.

The concentration level recitals will be performed by Awara Conrad, Bill Tweed, Sandy Pattern, and Andre Ashley.

Currently, performance dates have not all been established.
