INSIDE AFRICA

Last call for BC Africa trip

"Brevard Inside Africa" applications are due no later than Friday, Dec. 14, and according to Project Inside-Out Coordinator Sybil Dodson, selection will be announced in January.

The BC work team of 14 students and four adult leaders will participate in a three-week African experience, May 23-June 12. It will be the second international work trip since Project Inside-Out began two years ago this spring. The pilot project sent a BC team to Durango, Mexico.

"Brevard Inside Africa" will be a combination service, sightseeing and cultural awareness trip. The main focus of the work experience will a week spent on a construction project at a mission in Meru, Kenya.

In addition, the team will view wildlife in natural habitats at Nairobi National Park and Masai Mara Game Reserve.

Also, plans call for traveling to a mountain lodge on the slopes of Mt.

Nairobi for high-altitude game viewing, touring Lake Nakura and seeing the legendary home of a million flamingoes, and journeying to the foot of famous Mt. Kilimanjaro.

The cost for each student will be $1,200 (out of a total of $3,400, with private contributions toward the project covering the balance). This includes all travel, services of an English-speaking guide, lodging, sightseeing fees and an average of two meals a day.

Dodson estimates each student will need at least $300 in spending money, plus a passport and current specified inoculations.

Applications for "Brevard Inside Africa" may be picked up from Dodson at the Project Inside-Out office in Stamey. Dodson urges students who have waited to the last minute to take advantage of this final opportunity. "This will be the trip of a lifetime," she says.

The building of a climbing wall

by William T. Greer III
Clarion Reporter

Brevard College plans to build a climbing wall for its rockclimbers. The BC rockclimbing club will be in charge of the wall.

The wall will be built inside the Boshamer Gymnasium in the Auxiliary Gym. The wall will be 24 feet wide and 20 - 24 feet high. There will be three sections to the wall consisting of low angle climbing for beginners, vertical climbing for the intermediates, and overhangs for the advanced climbers.

The only reason the wall has not been built yet is because the college is still waiting for an architect to approve the plans of the wall.

As soon as the plans are approved the wall will be built. The climbing club members will work together with the College maintenance staff to help build it.

The addition of the climbing wall will not only benefit the members of the club, but it will also be of great use to the climbing classes on rainy days.

Another advantage of the climbing wall is that the instructor will be able to help the climbers because he can see every move they make.

Chris Crane, the vice president of the climbing club, said, "I hope the wall will be used and not abused." Both Frank Garrett, president of the climbing club, and Crane think that President Greer, and Recreation Instructor Clyde Carter are to be thanked, because without them the wall never would have been built.

This issue of the Clarion is dedicated to Assistant Editor Sarah Fish, who has been accepted to the University of Alabama television program. Congratulations, Sarah!
