

Spring Production

Tosca's Telling Wilde Tales Stuns Audience

by Lorrin Wolf
Clarion Editor

The spring production of Jules Tosca's "Telling Wilde Tales," directed by Robert A. White, ran from April 15-18 and 22-24 in the Barn Theater. The play consisted of seven short stories that each contained a moral, including "The Star Child" and "The Nightingale and the Rose."

The ensemble cast included Geoff Green, Jonathan Mabry, Tim Reese, Dayna Ritter, Mindy Ruch, John Runberg, Royce Sellers, David Sims, Julie Solomon, Robert White, and Amy Wright. Each cast member performed many roles, often in the same tale.

The ensemble wore story-tellers' robes accented with different stoles. Character changes were made obvious in the script because the characters had no costume or make-up identification.

The set consisted of stairs, two benches, and four platforms all painted black and white. The walls of the Barn Theater stunned audiences with their black and white geometric shapes.

The Cameron P. West Wing, an extension of the Barn Theater which

Skateboarding Is Illegal In Brevard City Limits And BC Campus

by Josh Markle
Clarion Staff Writer

If you live in the city of Brevard or attend Brevard College, and you own a skateboard, you might as well put it up in storage. Both have outlawed skateboarding.

According to Brevard College Dean of Students Norman Witek, this is based on a liability standpoint. Brevard College has had problems in the past with kids coming on campus and skateboarding down the hills, off the steps of the library, and in front of administration building.

The college checked with their insurance company, and was told that there was a high-risk factor and it was best for them to ban the usage of skateboards. The college talked about constructing a building where kids as well as students could skateboard, but the insurance company did not go for it.

Although this is a fun, recreational sport, students have to understand the liability that is involved. A few years back a student was skateboarding in the lobby of the old Student Union building and shattered a huge glass window. From that moment on, Brevard College knew they had to enforce this law. Students who are caught skateboarding will receive a fair warning, but if the problem seems to prolong, necessary actions will be taken.

includes handicapped accessible bathrooms, was first used during this production. The project was made possible by a challenge grant by trustee

William Stanback.

The next production, a dramatic reading entitled Love Letters, will run from April 30 to May 1 at 8 p.m. The play stars Rita Colbert and Sam Cope. Free student tickets can be obtained in the secretary's office of Beam Administration building.

"Telling Wilde Tales" featured BC student actors (from left to right) Royce Sellers, Jonathan Mabry, David Sims, Mindy Ruch, and Dayna Ritter. (Clarion photo by Kelley Hulsey)

