

Money Management for Students

Many students work, on and off campus, for extra money

by Richard Hartogs
Clarion Staff Writer

How can students earn more money while at Brevard? Many students take advantage of jobs on and off campus. But is the money earned enough to support them?

One way that students get money is from their family. Some students get weekly allowances while other students get a monthly allowance. Also, students have earned money over the breaks with jobs at home. It is hard to get any figures of how much money students need. Every student has their own spending habits.

Many students have found jobs off campus. The jobs range from working at Ingles and Burger King, to Oh! Susanna's. Thomas Weber is one of the students who works off campus. He is a sandwich maker at Burger King. He has had that job since the first week of school. Burger King has three BC students working for them. Thomas says, "The money I earn covers the tuition that I have to pay for on my own." Weber also has a work-study job.

John Trollinger works at Camp Tekoa in Hendersonville on the weekends. John earns $100 a weekend (Friday-Sunday). John instructs groups in rock climbing, ropes, and leads with activities and discussions. He uses the money for "gas and just spending money."

Another BC student who currently works at the new Brevard Food Outlet is on his seventh job in Brevard. Jay Ford is a waiter at Saffron's. Jay works an average of 25 hours a week, including weekends. Most of the students who have off campus jobs say that it was not difficult to find a job.

Many students on campus have jobs known as "work-study" jobs. The students who have these jobs are usually under financial aid. Lianne Masterson, the Director of Financial Aid, is in charge of the Work Study program. There are 60 jobs available to the students on campus.

The hourly wage for students is $4.50 per hour. The students work an average of eight hours a week. The students get paid once a month, and the money comes from the Federal Government and Brevard College. The Federal Government puts up most of the money, while Brevard College matches a percentage of the money. Students can earn up to one thousand dollars per year. There are certain disclosed limits.

Students must qualify for financial aid in order to be eligible to have a work-study job. Masterson said, "students think they can just walk in and get a job, but they must qualify."

Jobs on campus range from working in the computer lab, the Office of Public Information, the music library in Dunham, the Transfer Office, and many more. The jobs in the cafeteria and lifeguards at the pool are not run by "work-study". It is hard to find students who are certified lifeguards on work-study, so students can ask the person in charge of the pool in the gym. The cafeteria is run by a separate company. One can ask the manager in the cafeteria if there are any openings.

Resident Assistants are run by the Student Affairs Office, and students may inquire about an RA position with their hall director.

There are no jobs available right now. At the beginning of each semester students who want work-study jobs are put on a waiting list.

Henry Stepp/Clarion

Barbie Hawkins earns extra money working for A.R.A. in the Storm Cellar (a.k.a. Snack Bar).

This year's Health Fair presents new theme: 'The New You'

by Josh Adams
Clarion Staff Writer

The health fair this year will have a different face. In fact, it will not even have the same atmosphere as past health fairs. This time it will be titled "New

You Day". Pat Jenkins, the campus nurse, is the director of the fair, and explained what the new concept will be.

"The New You" will take place on April 21 from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m. in the Rutherford Room adjacent to the dining hall. Several local representatives will be on hand to demonstrate their trades. Margaret Epperson, a local cosmetologist, will give free consultations. Brevard Clothiers will offer make-up demos. There will be a variety of other things to take advantage of.

Throughout the day there will be door prizes and a chance to win money in the fashion show. First place will win $25.00, second and third places will win $10.00. There will also be prizes awarded for funniest and most futuristic costumes. Anyone interested should sign up in the infirmary.

PIO hours must be completed before you can graduate

Special to the Clarion
from PIO Office

Each student is required to complete 30 Project Inside-Out service hours for graduation. If you intend to graduate on May 14, or if you are going to transfer to another school and send credit hours back to Brevard to complete your degree, you have to complete the PIO hours while enrolled at Brevard College. This means that all PIO hours have to be completed by May 11. Those students returning to Brevard next fall may do their PIO hours over the summer break. See Fran Lynch in the PIO office for details about work for this semester or this summer.