

Environmental News::

2004 SGA Election
Results after a Disjunctive Forum

Peregrine Falcons in the Pisgah:
No Longer
Endangered, but still Sensitive

Asheville's Favorite
Music Venue

Men's and Women's Basketball Falls Short

Peregrine Falcons in the Pisgah:
No Longer Endangered, but still Sensitive

Chris Faulkner

"It seems that every season someone who is uneducated to the Peregrine closure is seen climbing in closed areas."

Every year on January 15th Steve Longnecker, a local Brevard rock climber, volunteers to post signs on trees at the base of Looking Glass Rock. In big bold black letters backed by a bright orange background the sign says, "Area behind This Sign Closed Temporarily to Protect Peregrine Falcon Nest Sites." These signs are sponsored and enforced by the US Forest Service and the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission.

SEE FULL ARTICLE page F 2

Trees Removed in Pisgah Forest

Nathan Jerkins

The beetle eats away at the live wood that is located just below the bark of the tree, and soon the tree is no longer able to sustain itself. "

Several trees were cut down and removed a few weeks ago across from the riding stables entrance on U.S. 276, in Pisgah Forest, North Carolina. The riding stables are roughly two miles beyond the Pisgah Forest ranger station.

SEE FULL ARTICLE
page F3

Do you have environmental concerns?

Send them to Nathan Jerkins, our environmental editor!

Top Stories

Features

Editorials

CampusNews

Community News

Environmental News

Sports News

Arts &

Entertainment

Letters to the Editor

Staff

The Clarion is published by and for the students at Brevard College. Letters to the editor should be emailed to Heather Ochse, Editor.