

Debate Class

Travis Wireback (left) cross examines Michael Spradlin and Stanislas Foucqueteau for the affirmative on whether the United States should significantly strengthen our system of checks and balances among two or more branches of the federal government. The debate took place Oct. 4 as part of Ralph Hamlett's COM 380, "Argumentation and Debate," class. For more debate opportunities on campus, students are invited to attend the Brevard Debate Society and Young Politicians of America meetings on Thursdays at 5:45 p.m. in MG 139.

Darfur Town Burned

by Carrie Bowen
Staff Writer

The city of Haskanita in Northern Darfur was burned to the ground last week.

The town was taken over two weeks ago by the Sudanese government after the Sept. 29 attack by rebels on an African Union peacekeeping base.

The U.N. will not comment on who specifically started the fire.

10 African soldiers died in the attack on the peacekeeping base.

The burning of Haskanita began last Wednesday. The market area was looted.

There is speculation on whether the burning was done by rebel groups, the Sudanese militia, or the Janjaweed militias.

After the attack on the peace keeping base, 15,000 civilians fled the area.

The number of wounded and deaths in the attack on Haskanita is unknown.

The attack on Haskanita and the attack on the African Union has halted peace talks between the Sudanese government and rebels that was scheduled for this month in Tripoli, Lybia.

Iron Pour

The Art Department will be hosting the Iron Pour this Saturday morning outside of the art building.

"How can I find it?"

Well, if you notice anything that looks like it's out of a medieval movie with smoke and flames, then guess what? you've found the Iron Pour.

Now that you know where it is, how about "what is it?"

Simple.

Art majors create molds and pour molten iron into them.

So come check it out if you find this at all interesting. You can perhaps even participate.
