

Aziz Ansari comes to western NC

It's about damn time the Asheville cell center got some decent stand up and Ansari is one of my personal favorite acts touring right now. His last special "Intimate Moments for a Sensual Evening," was some of the most left field material I've ever heard. Look up the part on YouTube where he crashes his twelve year old cousin's biology message board or his other little cousin's accidental internet rivalry with Kanye West. It's absolutely killer stuff.

But beyond my personal feelings about the guy (and they're pretty bro-mantic) he deserves a shout-out for coming over here and not staying on the west coast. That takes balls, as the South is a notoriously difficult stand up circuit. So I humbly ask you all not only as Brevard students, but as people who want more out of our entertainment venues to dig deep (it's only forty bucks) and make this guy feel at home... which for him is South Carolina now that I think about it.

Come on guys. You owe it not just to yourself, but to your college, your community, and your local Parks and Recreation supervising assistant.

Get this dude on your comedy radar yesterday... now can anyone tell me were to hang up my soapbox?

By Alex McCracken
Staff Writer

Fun day of Adventure. Form a team of two and participate in the competition to win gift cards on April 20. It will be an all day event separated by two individual events. During the day we will be putting on Legends of the Hidden Temple. It was a show back in the 90's that some of you may remember.

The game consists of teams of two and will cost a mere $6 to enter ($3 per person). The money we earn will be donated to Charlie's Animal Hospital.

That night there will be a Dub-Step party in Coltrane. We will have YPBC and BCBC members outside of the entrances with bags to collect clothes donations. People must bring an item of clothing to donate in order to get in. Items of clothing collected will be donated to S.A.F.E Attic.

