

(left to right) Caleb Welborn with debate partner Burton Hodges fight for the affirmative against C.J Wilson and DeVon Holmes who stand on the negative at the 11th annual Brevard College debate last night. The debate resolution was as follows: The United States federal government should substantially reduce restrictions on nuclear power for energy production. In the end, the negative (Wilson and Holmes) won the debate with a vote of 2-1. The judging panel consisted of Professor Andrew Baker, Michael Cohen, J.D., and Shelton Jones, J.D., who has been a judge of this annual debate since the society was started at BC eleven years ago. Baker said, "All four of you should be incredibly proud of yourselves. This takes an incredible amount of work and I am extremely impressed with both sides."

Thea Dunn

Finals Armageddon?

by Andrew Gunnin

