

Three Candidates Campaign for DTH Editor

Campus-wide elections will be held on Wednesday, February 14. Three candidates for Daily Tar Heel Editor declared their candidacy to the BSM.

Allen Jernigan, Reid Tuvim, and David Stacks have each expressed their desires to function in the editor position. Jernigan, a junior journalism major from Raleigh, hopes to make the DTH a paper worth looking for. He favors having more papers printed and an improved distribution system.

He also feels that the DTH must probe situations of racial and sexual discrimination. He favors unbiased reporting of racism and sexism. Jernigan feels that soccer and women's basketball should be recognized as major sports. He also hopes to start an Intramural and club sports scoreboard.

Jernigan has served as editor of the Summer Tar Heel, Photography editor, columnist and photographer, and has contributed to Nutshell Magazine, ACC Basketball Handbook, and Cellar Door.

Tuvim, a junior journalism major from Charlotte, favors a balanced coverage of national, state, and local and campus news, with a strong emphasis on student stories.

He also favors finding a solution to the distribution problem of the DTH. He plans to have papers delivered to every dorm on campus. Tuvim plans to work with the Tar Heels full-time business staff to reach a more equitable solution.

Tuvim favors increased coverage of the university administration and coverage of the various organizations, including the BSM. He also feels that beats should be better covered.

Tuvim has worked with the DTH staff since his freshman year. He has served as copy editor, night editor, assistant managing editor, and news editor. He was the first editor of Weekender, and worked on the news desk of the Greensboro Daily News this past summer.

Stacks, a junior journalism major from Blowing Rock also favors a better distribution system of the DTH.

He also feels that the DTH should be a showcase of student-oriented activity.

Stacks has served as state and national editor for the DTH. He has written for The Associated Press and the United Press International, and has worked for the UNC Journalist and the University Student Handbook. Stacks has spent the past two summers as a reporter for the Greensboro Record.

NEWS NOTES

On Campus

Cranford campaigns for CGC

Greg Cranford announced his candidacy for Campus Governing Council for District 10 (Hinton James).

Cranford hopes to implement ideas which the residents of James submit as suggestions.

Cranford, a sophomore from Newton, North Carolina, hopes to push the CGC for a Black Studies requirement at UNC. "It is important for all students to understand and be challenged by minority perspectives and cultures because in a desegregated society we must all deal with these."

He also favors a quicker proposal and financial support for the proposed South Campus Union.

Cranford also favors an increase in BSM funding. "It is almost the only student-funded organization that displays Black culture on a supposedly 'liberal' but traditional White campus."

Cranford dislikes the scholarships that are provided for the officers of student body president, treasurer, and attorney general. He hopes that this will be eliminated.

Cranford hopes to suggest that the CGC meetings will become open to the public. Cranford favors the CGC Springfest idea for the spring and plans to see that the project is successfully completed and planned for next year.

Cranford is a Union Social Committee member, a BSM member, and Upward Bound tutor, a campus Y Big Buddy participant, and a Young Democrats member.

Midnight Blues airs on WXYC

UNC's campus radio station WXYC has a new addition to its programming schedule.

A musical program, entitled Midnight Blues, airs Monday nights from midnight until 3 a.m. The show is produced by Orlando Dobbin.

Dobbin, a junior RTVMP major got the idea for the program from his Radio Production class.

During the program, Dobbin plays rhythm and blues music. He explained, "I've been instructed to exclude disco and popular music that is played at parties. I'm hoping that this will change."

The Garner native has been interested in radio work since the age of nine. Working at the radio station is a fulfillment of a dream he has always had.

I hope that students will call in more, Dobbin stated, I would like to give students what they want." He plays requests for students during his program.

Dobbin also makes public service announcements, focusing on campus events, and speakers.

Midnight Blues presently is a one night a week affair, but Dobbin hopes that the program will be extended to other nights during the week.

Dobbin feels that music has played a big role in the Black Experience and he attempts to convey his feelings through the sweet mellow sounds of rhythm and blues to the campus community.

Candidates for Senior office

Janet Moss and Karen Tagalos contacted the BSM office to announce their candidacy for senior class president and vice-president respectively.

Moss, a junior zoology major from Mathews, N.C., has served as a resident advisor, on the Orientation Committee, and with the Big Brother program.

Tagalos, a junior studio art major from Charlotte, also works as a resident advisor and has worked on the Orientation Committee.

Both candidates enjoy working with others and becoming involved. A major plan which the two hope to further implement is the Senior Panic Week, which was started by the present officers.
