Why Library Science Is A Vital Program

Cleveland County schools began with seven librarian and teacher-librarian positions unfilled, and they are still unfilled. And yet hundreds of teachers graduating each year could not be placed. Education majors do themselves the favor of being more certain of job placement when they get certification as librarians or teacher-librarians.

Gardner-Webb's new library science program will help fill the pressing need for librarians and teacher-librarians. It was started in September, with Miss Ann Sebastian, Reference Librarian, teaching the course in Introduction to Libraries and Librarianship. This introductory course is designed to serve as a foundation course for Library Science majors, master certification requirements, and provide classroom teachers with a workable knowledge of library procedures. Mrs. Sandifer will teach Cataloging and classification in the spring semester.

A teacher-librarian can get certification with only 12 hours of library science. Students majoring in elementary education are already required to take 3 hours of library science. That leaves only 9 hours to be added to their program.

Frequently teachers proficient in a second discipline are hired above those with only one concentration.

Those majoring in almost any other field might find library science helpful as a second discipline. Only 18 hours are required for certification as a school-librarian.

Any student planning graduate work will find the reference course in library science especially useful before he begins research.

The librarians and education professors will be glad to answer any questions concerning the library science program.

Lebanon - Born Student Finds Home In U.S.

By Bob Hunt

Armen Ajabian, age 26, came to America in July of 1969, and worked 12 hours a day in a New York City cafeteria as a dishwasher until time for school to begin in August. Armen is a native of Bourj-Hamond, Lebanon.

Ajabian's father is a shoemaker and owns a small shop which employs two people other than himself and one son. He is one of three children. Before coming to America he graduated from the Armenian General Benevolent Union (AGBU), a secondary school for boys, where classes were taught in four languages: English, French, Arabic and Armenian. Armen studied in English. Because of financial problems Armen does not enroll in an institution for higher learning and was obliged to go to work. For seven years he worked as a cost clerk for Caterpillar Tractor Company saving all he could to come to the United States to get an education. The average income in Lebanon is 75 L. L. (Lebanese pounds) per year which is equal to $75.00 in U.S. currency. The transferring of Lebanese pounds into U.S. currency is 3.20 L. L. to one American dollar. For this transfer the average Lebanese must work approximately three hours a day.

Armen decided to come to Gardner-Webb because his friend Aziz, a former Gardner-Webb student, recommended it as a Christian college. This is important to Armen, who feels that Christian morals, principles, and ethics are an essential and integral part of life and he believes he will receive the best in Christian education at Gardner-Webb. He is proud of and grateful to the president and faculty of Gardner-Webb and the people of the Helling Springs community for the very warm and friendly welcome extended him.

Presently, Armen is a day student living with Mr. and Mrs. W.E. McSwain who have been most kind and helpful in every way. Last year he lived in

126 Student Teachers Will Represent G-W

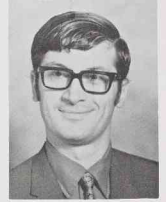

For the first time Gardner-Webb College will participate in a teacher training program on a senior college basis. A total of 126 students will be sent from Gardner-Webb this year to teach in the two Carolinas.

These students will be involved in student teaching for a period of eight weeks. They will begin by observing and participating in a small scale and will eventually take over full teaching responsibilities for a minimum of 90 hours and up to 200 hours.

Student teaching also known as "practice" teaching is a big requirement for education majors at Gardner-Webb. These students participate in the block program in which they take an accelerated class schedule that enables them to do 16 weeks work in 8 weeks. The remaining 8 weeks are used for student teaching.

Counties where these students will teach are Cleveland, Gaston, Lincoln, Mecklenburg, Polk, and Rutherford in North Carolina and Cherokee County in South Carolina.

On April 3 these student teachers will take the National Teacher Examinations. Then the State Department of Public Instruction will examine their transcripts at which time if all is in order the student will receive a class "A" North Carolina Teaching Certificate. Those students who will be teaching on October 26 and the schools where they are to teach are posted behind the door of room 32 Hamrick.
