Rockefeller's short address included statements about the Revolutionary spirit which he felt was still alive today and exemplified extremely well in the Kings Mountain celebration. Circle K Begins New Year

The Circle K Club, one of the busiest service organizations on campus, is doing its part to work within the realm of the International Circle K Theme. This year, the theme will be "Impact on Life." The different aspects of involvement that can be dealt with, in working within the framework are, action for public health, work with the youth and the elderly, consumer protection, world hunger, and various types of social causes. From these five areas, the Gardner-Webb chapter of Circle K has chosen to deal primarily with the two areas of public health and working with, and for, youth and the elderly.

Plans are being made now for Circle K to work on five major projects that will be beneficial to the club's two areas of concentration. Current emphasis is on raising money for the March of Dimes. Members brought their year by running a checkpoint for the Bike-Hike that was sponsored by the National Association for Retarded Children.

The stated purpose of the Circle K Club includes people-to-people involvement and the development of an awareness that individuals are much more than scattered human beings. Circle K also helps to show that all people are a part of the environment and, working together, they can help bring about social change.
