music faculty. She will teach private lessons on stringed instruments. Mrs. West received her music training at Converse College, where she majored in violin and music education. She has played in the Columbus, Ohio Philharmonic Orchestra, the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, and the Brevard Festival Orchestra. She has also taught instrumental music in the public schools in Charlotte.

There will be several organized music groups on campus this year: band, orchestra, chorus, and ensemble. Credit of one hour per semester will be given for those who desire it. These activities are open to all who can qualify. Interested students are asked to contact the department in which they would like to apply and arrange for an audition. The orchestra this year will be a college community orchestra and part of an adult education program.

Thanks To:

The administration for absorbing the cost of the printing of this issue of the paper. This was made necessary because of an advertising mix-up. We greatly appreciate their being so willing to help us out of a difficult situation.

Remember That:

The Student Center is a beautiful building built especially for us. Let's work together to keep it this way. Please put your cigarette butts in the ashtrays and the trash in the trash cans. Thank you for the help.

Extra-curricular Activities Broaden Student Life

In reading through the St. Andrews catalogue and student handbook one encounters the term "student life" quite often; it is a simple term and a common term but it is also one of the most often misunderstood terms used in reference to college. Many times the student himself does not know clearly what the term designates. Student life does not refer only to dances and parties which the student takes part in, but it covers all those things which a student does outside the classroom. It is concerned with all the other activities which take place on the college campus that, along with the knowledge the student gains in the classroom, make for the well-rounded citizen.

Everyone knows that all work and no play makes one a dull person. Here at St. Andrews we would do well to think of each day as composed partly of work, of play, and of prayer. Making one's day a combination of these three results in an interesting life, a profitable life, a good life.

Exactly how does the program of student life here at our college work to contribute to the complete education of each student? Through dances, intramurals, the student health program, and other facets the administration hopes to create an atmosphere conducive to both classroom learning and social well-being. Personal problems can be talked over with one's section leader, big brother or sister, members of the faculty and administration, or any one of a number of other people. Each of these persons is ready and willing to help anyone who has problems that might interfere with his learning and prevent his having mental and spiritual peace.

Student life is the tying together and the inter-relating of classroom and social life. All though we have said that the campus life program refers to those activities which take place outside the classroom, it would be absurd to say that the two-educational life and social life are and remain separate and apart. The things that one learns in the classroom are useful in his social life and vice-versa.

Briefly, the student life program is the means by which one's education is completed; it is the classroom outside the classroom. How lopsided we would be if all we did was sit in a classroom and take in the formal knowledge given out there. Through its activities the campus life program attempts to even-up the scales of one's learning; there is no denying that more than formal learning is necessary for survival today.

Here at St. Andrews the Student Center Board with Larry Fowler as president is made up of student representatives and will work in close conjunction with the Student Center Director, Miss Nancy Brown, to provide activities in the center which in the course of the year they hope appeal to every student in the student body. In addition to these planned activities the center offers indoor games and snack-bar facilities.

The student center is not the only place in which student life can be rounded out. Intramurals, student publications and resident hall programs are some of the other means by which it is hoped that each student can come to be a happy and useful person.

Already scheduled is a concert series which is going to feature some fine artists and performers throughout the year. But in the other departments - the intermurals, student center activities and publications - your ideas and desires are to be the guiding forces. Your ideas and wishes can be expressed through your section leaders, student center representatives or can be carried directly to the Dean of Students if one so desires.

The sentiments of the administration and faculty are that each student should be treated as a mature person until he shows that he cannot be treated as such. This idea of maturity is carried over to the student life program: a mature person expresses his wishes in a manner most likely to allow him to have those wishes granted. Let us hear from you!

Thoughts Before Entering College

By M. PRESTON STONE

What does the, if you'll pardon the redundancy, new freshman really feel upon entering college? It's not easy to put all the various thoughts and questions of some 250 people into a small newspaper article. Everyone of us undoubtedly has a small twinge of anxiety or apprehension toward this new "college life." Everyone of us will express it in a different way though. Some will laugh and joke, feigning lightheartedness; some will be solemn; some will try not to think about all the new responsibilities suddenly heaped upon them.

I think it is safe to assume that each individual, no matter how hesitant, is really looking forward to this new adventure. For some this is a chance to "get a new start," to really study and do better scholastically. For others this adventure is a wonderful opportunity to meet new people, develop new ideas and think creatively without restraint.

Many, in fact I would imagine all of us, have at various times during the past weeks pondered the question, "Wonder what I'll be doing this time next week?" or at least a question of similar nature. The answers to these thoughts are slowly appearing - although not necessarily in the forms expected. It's quite an experience to take care of our own laundry or decide how to decorate a room or to meet for the first time persons who are to be our companions for the next nine months.

No matter in what fashion these answers appear to us, we will accept them as non-chatteringly as possible, trying to lull ourselves into a sense of well-being and a deep devotion to our studies, sporting our newfound ego-defense mechanisms. When all the tests have been completed and each person has the first entry on his "college record" we may slowly begin to realize the great adventures and even greater challenges that will face us in the forthcoming years. But this is a bit of long distance thinking; it is the present which concerns us - What will those first few days of class reveal; How well will each individual make his place in the Class of '65? You will add your thoughts to these few and perhaps this will add to the total concept.

With a bit of "blood, sweat, and tears" we are starting college - I wonder how it will be four years from now.

Dr. Vardell To Give Annual Piano Recital

On Monday evening, October 2, Dr. Charles G. Vardell, Dean of the Music Conservatory, will be featured in his public piano recital.

The recital is to take place in the National Guard Armory at 8:30.

We should be extremely proud to have such a well-known, distinguished musician on the Conservatory faculty. Dr. Charles Vardell has been listed in "Who's Who" as an outstanding musician and is well-known in the higher music circles as an excellent musician, teacher and composer.

Dr. Vardell's recital will be as follows:

"From the Well-Tempered girl tennis teams went undefeated for three straight years. His boys teams won the Intercollegiate Athletic Conference tennis championships. His tennis record was an astounding 48 wins to 3 losses. He was Georgia's tennis coach of the year in 1958-59 and 60. This record will be hard to beat in the future, especially in Georgia.

Mr. Hackney accepted the job as Athletic Director at St. Andrews and plans for intercollegiate competition in basketball, baseball, tennis, and possibly wrestling.

Mr. Hackney chose Physical Education for his vocation because of this love for sports and the abundant opportunities in working with young people. His favorite hobbies are hunting, fishing, and golf.

Mr. Hackney is looking forward to working with the students of St. Andrews and hopes for a very successful Physical Education Program.

St. Andrews students will participate in intercollegiate sports. During the winter months there will be basketball at the National Guard Armory. In the spring baseball will be played in the Legion Field. Within a few weeks the six all weather tennis courts on campus will be finished. Also, there is to be golf at Scotch Meadows. These are the few sports that we will have this year. Others being planned. As St. Andrews grows so will our sports. This will also be determined by the interest the individual students show in the sports activities.

and concerting. Yes, realizing that this has been a once-in-a-lifetime experience in more ways than one, and quite necessarily essential, one can be thankful for the New Student Orientation Week that was so recently survived. Due to the diligent hard work on the parts of countless leaders and the cooperation of you new students, everyone is continually eating, meeting, and sleeping on a surprisingly regular schedule. It is almost over, this period of "How do you do, St. Andrews?" and these strange faces and buildings will soon all be familiar as old friends, to be remembered and cherished for a long time to come.
