

EXTRA! EXTRA! EXTRA!

The Lance

LETTERMAN'S CLUB
DANCE
SATURDAY

CLUB FAIR
TONIGHT
8:00-9:30

ST. ANDREWS PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE

LAURINBURG, N. C., SEPTEMBER 2, 1966

VOL. 6, NO. 1.

Freshmen Adjust To College, Prepare For Serf Week

Tests, tests, meetings, more tests, etc. . . This seems to be most St. Andrews Freshmen's general conception of college.

Even though the freshman class was divided into three parts for orientation, their unity has been demonstrated through their ability to survive such obstacles as introduction to serfdom, handbook test, registration, traditional donning and beanie wearing, the invasion of upper classmen, and the realization that one must sign out wherever she goes.

Having viewed "The Immense World," freshmen take the most notes, pay the best attention, and grasp for the understanding of the "Big Bang Theory."

Now, completely covered with sore unknown muscles, the freshmen have been introduced to physical education St. Andrews style: 20 sit-ups, 1 pull-up, and 1/2 squat thrusts.

The lines have been hot with phone calls home . . . "please put $50 in the bank. My books cost a fortune."

Eating in the cafeteria becomes a true way of life where the student body gathers in brute force. It is here that you see that cute junior boy or that precious sophomore girl.

Those who went before now take revenge on the Class of 1970.

The sophomore class once again reigns supreme over -- their lowly serfs. The formal presentation of this statement took place Thursday evening as the silenced serfs honored the majestic Knight of St. Andrews, sophomore president Danny Beerman, as he was rowed to the banks of the campus dam.

Full of enthusiasm the freshmen are facing their week of servitude. Entering as serfs, they will emerge as Lords and Ladies of St. Andrews. A reception and breakfast in their honor is scheduled for Monday morning.

Each day has been designated and designed specifically for special events. Those serfs who are intolerant to their sophomore rulers will answer to the Beanie and the Inquisition Committee on Saturday, September 10.

A dance is planned in honor of the knighted serfs on that same evening.

Freshmen, here is just a word to the wise. Obey your great sophomore leaders. If one cannot swim, learn. Be prepared to rise early and to go to bed late. Keep your walking boots handy and have a wonderful time.

Honor Code Adherence Personal

In the near future every St. Andrews student will be faced with the decision whether or not to pledge his personal adherence in support of the newly-accepted Honor Code.

All students will have the opportunity in their suites to sign the Honor Code. Students are requested and encouraged to sign the code, but no students presently at St. Andrews are required to sign the code.

Next year's freshmen will be confronted with the code at the first of their matriculation and will enter St. Andrews under the Honor Code.

Since the 1966-67 catalogue with the Honor Code in it was not in circulation at the time of this year's freshmen's enrollment, today's freshmen are not automatically under the Honor Code. They will be given the choice to sign the code as will the upperclassmen.

Journalism At St. Andrews

On the long roster of new developments for the fall semester at St. Andrews is the first edition of English 210-Introduction to Journalism.

Sitting on the professor's end of the log will be Jack Abernathy, college news director. As of registration day, the student end wasn't too crowded. The instructor noted there will be room for more.

Stories written by class members will be appearing in "The Lance" during the fall semester.

The journalism course is offered for three hours of credit. Class sessions will be in Room 118 at 2:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. "Auditors" will be welcome, according to the instructor.

BAGPIPER LINDA McLEOD accompanies convocation procession as the 6th academic year officially opened. Prof. W. D. White was the honored speaker.

Freshmen girls leisure by the side of their dormitory swimming pool. Pine Acres is indeed a new experience in dorm life.

School Begins, Pine Acres Dorm Has Pool, Shortages, And Fun

By JOHN APPERSON,
LANCE STAFF WRITER

A brick drive, flanked by arching pecan trees, passes the quiet pool and reaches the white masonry building shaded by tall, long-needle pines. The sign says "Pine Acres Motel", but it is now part of St. Andrews campus, heretofore not noted for shady trees or swimming pools.

Because of a space shortage, the main building of the sprawling motel is now a dormitory for 27 coeds.

When asked what he felt about having all these girls in his motel, manager Jerry Riggins said, "It's a new experience." He went on to say that he had no particular problems, at least not yet.

Some of the girls living in the leased motel felt differently however. Mary Fletcher Parrott, a freshman from Kinston, said she was not particularly disappointed but that the distance to school presented some problem. She worries about the times when she will "get stranded."

One of Mary's classmates, Joyce Thompson, from McLean, Va., thought the setup was "nice" but lamented the complete lack of closet space. She especially relished having access to the Pines Acres pool.

In the regular motel lobby (the girls have their own entrance and lounge) the usual group of people was milling around. One man, a salesman from Charlotte, volunteered to be the chaplain for the group. When questioned about his clerical experience, he sheepishly admitted that he had none. Had he seen any pretty ones? "Just arrived," he smiled.

In charge of the experiment at Pine Acres are Dick and Linda Yeatman, both 23. Dick, just completing 4 years in the Navy, picked St. Andrews to begin his freshman year.

While attending summer session, he found the new "Dorm" needed a housemother. He and Linda got together and decided it would be a challenge and a financial help to accept the job.

Linda is a lively brunette who always looks like she is hurrying somewhere. And she usually is. Dick, keeping an imperturbable air, has to be a father and friend to the girls, while also driving the busses back and forth to the main campus. He will carry a regular freshman load while Linda plans to take "a course or two".

Continued On Page Two