Noted Columnist to Speak Here Friday

James Jackson Kilpatrick, Jr., a national-syndicated columnist, will visit St. Andrews on Friday as a guest speaker for Sr. C&C. He will give a public lecture on "A View From Capitol Hill" at 3:00 in room 195 of the gym.

Kilpatrick, a native Oklahoman and a graduate of the University of Missouri, began writing for newspapers at the age of five. He was copy boy for the Oklahoma City TIMES at 12 and a high school editor at 15. On his graduation from Missouri in 1941, he came directly to the Richmond NEWS LEADER as a general reporter.

Upon the retirement of the late Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman in the summer of 1949, Kilpatrick succeeded him in the editor's chair. He was then 28--the youngest editor in the country of a major editorial page.

Kilpatrick served as the editor of the NEWS LEADER for 18 years, until his own retirement in the summer of 1967. During this period he wrote three books and edited two others; he won the University of Missouri's gold medal for distinguished service to journalism and the Sigma Delta Chi award for distinguished editorial writing.

In 1964, Kilpatrick began writing a nationally syndicated column, "A Conservative View." It now appears in some 140 newspapers across the United States. From his office on Capitol Hill, Kilpatrick keeps a critical eye on Congress, the Supreme Court, and the White House. He travels a good deal, both in the U.S. and abroad, and contributes to a number of magazines. He is an associate of National Review.

Student Life Committee Nears Recommendation on Drinking Bill

The Student Life Committee met last night and conducted an open hearing concerning the issue of Senate Bill No. 19, Rules Committee Bill No. 5, commonly referred to as "the drinking bill".

Concerned faculty and students presented opposing stands on the issue in an attempt to bring to light the immediate consequences of the proposed legislation.

Spokesman for the issue were Fletcher Shives, junior; Joe Ingle, President of the Senior Class; Roger Pike, President of Winston-Salem Dorm; Bob Devlin, Senate Rules Committee Chairman.

Against the proposed issue were Mr. Robert Urie, Director of St. Andrews VRA program, and Mr. Carl Geffert, Associate Professor of German.

Presentations were also given by David Betts, Student Association Treasurer, and Mr. David Mallhiney, Professor of Anthropology.

Members of the Student Life Committee will weigh the evidence of the presentations and reconvene Monday afternoon at 4:00 p.m. to discuss the courses of action on the bill. The SLC is acting under the authority of President Ansley Moore who has requested the SLC to give him an advisory opinion on the bill.

It is the option of the SLC to either accept or reject the bill as it now stands, or to consider new evidence worthy of being included in the bill as it now stands. The function of the committee is explicitly to refer to President Moore the course of action it deems essential in the drinking bill issue.

Students and faculty are urged to discuss the drinking issue with SLC members prior to the

Fuller Hits Progress Toward 'Freedom'

Howard Fuller, 'Black Power' advocate, informally addressed students and faculty of the C&C 400 program last Friday.

Fuller centered the discussion hour around the theme, "The Chances of Freedom Within Our Society." He explicitly narrowed the topic to the chances of freedom for the Negro in our society.

Reflecting the present Negro situation upon a heritage of white domination, one which still dominates modern cultures, Fuller cited that government policy only favored integration when it was to the political advantage of the individual officials involved. For example, he recalled the striving for liberty and equality of mankind by Thomas Jefferson, who in turn held a good number of Negro slaves in bondage.

He related that President Johnson was a segregationist when he ran for state senator in Texas, because at that time it was to his political advantage to side with the segregationists of the state of Texas. In general, history is filled with such political examples. When America declares a war, it is patriotic in nature; when a foreign country wages war, it is revolutionary in nature.

He stated that the economical and social situation of the Negro today is at its worst, and that violence through rioting and revolution could not feasibly hurt the Negro's present situation. He suggested that you can't force a man who has nothing to listen to sound reasoning. If peaceful actions show no indications of fruitful results, you can't talk a desperate man out of attempting violent actions as a means to an end. He noted that the Negro, with his back to the wall, would not allow himself to be pushed through without carrying a good number of white agitators with him.

He stated that the white man owes every Negro the rights of equality, and that the whites owe the Negro for the sins of their fathers. The Negro today does not beg the white man for equal rights; he merely asks for what rightfully belongs to him.

In conclusion Fuller suggested that the chances of freedom for the Negro in America today could not be possible without revolution, for this is the only way the Negro can force the white man to do more than just talk about the chances of Negro equality and freedom.

He admits that the Negro today is granted more freedom than a century, even a decade ago, but questions, "Freedom to do what? We have the freedom to buy land in Lumberton for example, but no land in Lumberton is made available for us to buy."

When asked if revolution would only make the whites more resentful of the Negro, and hence push the issue of Negro equality back a full decade or more, Fuller reflected that the Negro has nothing to lose, for their is no room left to move back. The chances of complete freedom for the Negro today are slim without an effective revolution.
