

Dr. Miller to Speak At NSF Conference

The National Science Foundation has selected St. Andrews Presbyterian College as one of three colleges to describe its approach to science education to a national meeting of directors of NSF-sponsored projects. Dr. G. Tyler Miller, Jr. will outline the new St. Andrews program Thursday in a major conference address, "The Integrated Curriculum and Laboratory -- A Modular Approach." More than 800 directors of undergraduate projects sponsored by the National Science Foundation are expected for the conference which opens today in Washington, D.C. and ends Saturday.

Dr. Miller, assistant dean and professor of chemistry, directs the NSF-sponsored College Science Improvement Program grant at St. Andrews, one of the first 15 colleges in the country to win a COSIP grant. Accompanying Miller will be Dr. Donald G. Barnes, project director for the instructional equipment grant in chemistry which the NSF has awarded to St. Andrews.

he was identification officer and photographer for the force. He has been married for twenty-one years and has four children.

Mr. Gay has lived in the Laurinburg vicinity all his life, and up to his hiring by St. Andrews was a supervisor for the Tri-County Community Action organization in southern Scotland County. He hopes to study security work per se at Richmond Technical Institute in the near future.

The three-man security force is sufficient for college needs now, but plans expansion as the college grows.

The Student Affairs office has a tape cartridge which may have been taken from a St. Andrews student. The owner may claim this by calling ext. 306.

Community

It is not the "sex hangup" that is germane to the appropriateness of individual conduct in the light of personal freedom, but rather the "responsibility hangup" on the part of those who haven't yet recognized that the goals of the college community can be destroyed by inept individual behavior, whether such behavior involves sex, booze, dope, brawls, destruction of property, or other disruptions. To the extent that group objectives (and therefore the individual objectives of those who associated with the group for commonality of purpose) are fractionated by incompatible individual conduct, the "personal freedom" thereby "gained" represents an empty victory.
