Hart, Smythe Explain Programs To Joint Senate Session

Recruiting — No Deficit Budget Discussed

Dr. Donald J. Hart addressed the 1973-74 student government last Tuesday night in the classrooms of the Physical Education Building. The purpose of the meeting was several fold, starting off with President conducting installation ceremonies for the newly elected officers of next year's Cabinet.

Smythe says good relations with Church and Federal Organizations Important

Following the installation ceremonies, Allan Smythe, Director of Church Relations for St. Andrews, and President Hart gave short addresses and then received questions from the audience.

Mr. Smythe sitting back in his chair, hands behind his head, made the point that he would rather talk with those present than talk to them. He then proceeded to mention some of the work his office is involved in. He made note of the recent increase in federal funding for programs offered at St. Andrews and the importance of maintaining good relations in order to continue receiving these funds.

Financial support by Presbyterian Churches was also brought up in the same regard. The 637 Presbyterian churches in North Carolina alone, is a fact lending evidence in favor of developing good relations not only as a source of income, but for gaining prospective students as well. Smythe also mentioned the "deputation teams" consisting of students to be sent out next year to visit churches, giving potential applicants a chance to talk with St. Andrews people.

Dr. Hart, following Smythe, spoke concerning the changes to be made in the college system. He suggested that in order to get a proper idea of where St. Andrews is at present, it is necessary to examine how the college has evolved.

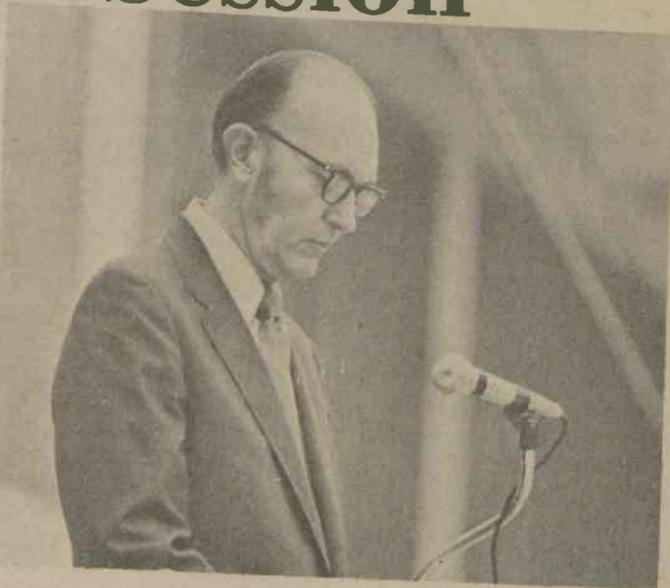

He used the C&C program as an example. When first established in 1961, C&C was a broad interdisciplinary program that was seen as extremely important to a liberal education. More recently however, "C&C has tended to become more and more content and faculty oriented than student oriented." The result of this and other such observations has led to course changes, most particularly from C&C to the St. Andrews

Studies Program.

College suffering common Problems

Colleges across the United States are suffering declines in enrollment and other financial problems. St. Andrews is geared for a least 900 students but presently has in the neighborhood of 700. Hart said it is necessary to look at how the College is doing things and to see what can be done better with less commitment of dollars. Enrollment and the interests on those enrolled

Gourley Resigns - Rayburn Appointed As Replacement

St. Andrew's continued its shakeup of various departments with a recent change in the position of Admissions Office Director. Due to the unrelieved shortage of applicants and decline in the student body which is presently approximately 660 students, Mr. Everett Gourley, Director of Admissions, submitted his resignation last week, effective the last day of May. This will be the end of a five year stay at the college.

Mr. Gourley's replacement

as Director of Admissions will be Ms. Jean Rayburn, a current member of the Admissions staff who came to the college staff the same year he did. Ms. Rayburn, who has a B. A. from Chapel Hill and an M. A. from Dartmouth, enters her new position with high recommendations and a good deal of experience. Before coming to St. Andrew's she was the Director of Admissions at Queens College in Charlotte, North Carolina. She has been active in both state and national admission counselors organizations.

Recruiting students for college is a tremendous problem at this time for most schools across the nation, ac-ording to Rayburn. Applications to St. Andrew's are down 4% from this time last year, which makes for an increasingly dangerous trend. The competition among small private colleges for available students if forcing many to close down or sell out to larger universities.

New ideas are already in the planning stage, although none could be defined thoroughly at this time. Ms. Rayburn was unavailable for comment on any of them due to a conference in Williamsburg which she is attending this week. A special advisor on admissions is to confer with her

Doubles Provides New Outlook

The recently appointed Dean of Students, Malcolm c. Doubles and the revised administrative structure in which he will work should contribute to a significantly new outlook in the Student Personnel services in the coming year. In contrast to the present administrative authority system, the new Dean of Students will report to the new Vice - President of the College in charge of academic affairs, Victor C. Arnold. In the past the Dean of Students reported directly to the President of the College, but this will no longer be the case. The resident directors and their assistants, however, will remain under the Dean of housing.

In a recent interview, Dr. Doubles expressed the understanding of his new position as centering on his responsibility to fulfill the policies of St. Andrews. These specific policies by which he is guided come from the Student Life Committee (of which he was the chairperson over this past year).

The new chair for Student Life Committee has not yet been announced, but Malcolm

Doubles sees that it is up to him as Dean of Students to insure the execution of policy, advise students of their rights so that they can act accordingly and to work in harmony with the Dean of Housing and Residence Directors.

Doubles pointed out that the nature of the resident director's job allow them a very wide range of action. They are not bound to resort to Student Personnel continually. They must attempt to go through the Dorm Council before they can take action or inform Student Personnel however.

Two Policies Effect Presence Of Dogs

The general agitation over the removal of two dogs from campus has cooled off; however, college and Health Department officials are still vitally concerned with the situation.

There are two policies which affect the presence of dogs on campus: that of the college and that of the Board of Health. According to Nathan McCormick, sanitarian for the

The Lance wishes Dr. John P. Daughtery a swift and full recovery from his recent illness. Mr. Daughtery, head of the Education department at St. Andrews is currently at Scotland Memorial hospital recovering from a heart attack he suffered while playing racquetball last Wednesday afternoon (April 24) in the gym. Scotland County Board of Health, his jurisdiction extends, for the most part, only over dogs within campus facilities. The presence of animals within dorms, the cafeteria, the snack bar, and possibly the Student Union is in violation with the Health laws; however, McCormick said that he had no authority over dogs outside on the campus unless there was a pack of dogs which were causing damage. In that case, the dog warden could be called in. He gave as a reason for this lack of authority, the absence of, or the non-enforcement of, a leash law in Scotland County. In all legality, dogs outside of campus facilities are permissible according to Health Department rules; however, because of the easily accessible entrance into buildings through the doors for handicapped students, the
